

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

TO MY WIFE
ELIZABETH MERRILL COOK
WHOSE INSPIRATION AND HELP
HAVE MADE THIS BOOK POSSIBLE

PREFACE

Only two questions need to be satisfactorily answered in order to insure for Middle English literature a much larger place in college courses than it has hitherto occupied. These two questions are: Is the literature of this period worth reading? and, Can it be read without a learned apparatus so formidable as to constitute a serious deterrent? The first question I have endeavored to answer in the Introduction; and to the second my affirmative reply is indicated in the whole method I have followed.

This book, then, has been framed, not in the interest of grammar, or of dialectical study, or of lexicography, but of literary enjoyment and profit. It has been made somewhat copious, that those who desire only easier selections may be able to avoid the harder, that it may be possible to examine certain species and ignore others, and yet that the more comprehensive student shall have before him a fairly full conspectus of the literature as a whole. If I have not failed in my attempt, the texts included ought not to be much harder to read than if they were Elizabethan, and those who read them will be acquainting themselves with an earlier and no less important age.

Authorities vary with respect to the limits of the Middle English period, the variation as to the beginning being between 1100 and 1200, and as to the end between 1400 and 1500. Some scholars, such as Sweet, call the language between 1100 and 1200 Transition Old English, and that between 1400 and 1500 Transition Middle English. In this book Middle English is assumed to cover 1100-1500. In two instances, works only to be found in manuscripts of later date than 1500 are assigned, on what seem to the editor sufficient grounds, to the fifteenth century.

The classification here observed is according to literary species, and not according to dialect or chronology. The species of literature are, however, not so clearly delimited in Middle English as in some other tongues, notably in Greek, so that the classification of certain pieces must be regarded as only approximative.

No separate vocabulary has been provided, and no separate body of notes. On each page the reader will find, it is hoped, what is essential for a sufficient understanding of that page; if this has entailed a certain amount of repetition, or what to some minds may seem excess, in the defining of words, it must be borne in mind that he who is able to read while running is not obliged to pause. The general introduction has been made brief. The prefatory notes to the various selections are longer or shorter, according to circumstances. The list of helpful books will enable the student to extend his inquiries in a variety of directions.

The editor has used his own judgment with respect to punctuation and capitalization, has normalized i and j, u and v, capitalized the first personal pronoun, and substituted 'Jesu' for the ordinary 'Jhesu' — which is due to a misapprehension. In the constitution of certain texts he has emended somewhat freely, but has always endeavored to supply the means of restoring the manuscript readings or the text of an earlier editor; where there is reason to suppose that the latter faithfully represents the manuscript, it has been referred to in the footnotes as 'MS.'

An effort has been made to give due credit in each specific case of indebtedness; if there has been any failure in this respect, it is involuntary.

If this book succeeds in making the Middle Ages seem more attractive, more clearly related to modern times, or more profoundly suggestive, the editor will be satisfied. To him Middle English literature helps to make England, not less real, but more visionary, in the sense of Kipling's lines:

She is not any common Earth,
Water or wood or air,
But Merlin's Isle of Gramarye,
Where you and I will fare.

INTRODUCTION

I. THE LITERATURE

Mediaeval European literature — at least if we except technical works and prose chronicles or histories — is characterized, in contrast with the ancient classics, by a certain expansiveness, resulting at times in an approach to garrulity. The author is not bent upon treating the matter in hand with the utmost economy, in order with the fewest possible strokes to achieve the finest proportions, the utmost simplicity, the most telling effect. The mediæval writer is more apt to be loose and desultory. At times he does not hesitate to be long-winded in description, discursive in the development of episodic reflection, tedious in the analysis of sentiment, or didactic in the enforcement of a moral. In all too few instances has he a sure sense of art — avoiding superfluity and digressions, and making straight for his goal. He employs repetition — for instance, in the refrain, or in the recurrent lines of the roundel; and, for the sake of rhyme, or to fill out a line, he will introduce conventional, almost meaningless, tags.

Vernacular writing in the Middle Ages was primarily addressed to the laity — to people who had not received the training of the schools, and who therefore were unaccustomed to strict sequences of thought, or to the measure and sobriety of perfect art. This may be clearly seen by the way in which translations are expanded — always excepting prose versions of the Bible and of some theological treatises. Chaucer,¹ in translating Boethius, uses three times as many words as the Latin verse, and more than twice as many as the Latin prose. The 38 words of Psalm 51. 1-3² in the Vulgate are converted by a late Middle English paraphrast into 194. Such translations, being less compact than the originals, made fewer demands upon the reader; he found them easier to follow, though his wits may have gone wandering before he reached the end.

Such absence of restraint may, according to circumstances, affect readers of to-day variously. Some things mediæval we may all find tedious, some things puerile; some things, on the other hand, simple, direct, and sweet—childlike, rather than childish. But take the pseudo-Mandeville,¹ for instance; is it easy to dismiss him with an epithet to which we should all assent? Is his book incredibly stupid—as much of it is certainly incredible—or is it always amusing? As easy to answer this, perhaps, as another question—is the compiler naïvely credulous, or is he an astute romancer? Perhaps neither the one nor the other, or rather both. Searching criticism reveals that some of his information rests on good authorities, and is true; other things are truth magnified and embellished by a purple mist; and still others are ancient poetry or fiction regarded as contemporary fact. His book is rambling, incoherent, uninformative, if you will; but to some minds it is charming. Piers Plowman leads us nowhither; but on the road we drop in at a tavern, and the low life of England under the senile Edward or the adolescent Richard is as plain before us as that of Holland in a picture by Teniers or Jan Steen, so that we look and listen in spite of ourselves.

All this is Gothic, both in the sense that we recognize, and in that which appealed to our ancestors of the eighteenth century. It lacks restraint; it is flamboyant; it sins by excess; it seems to emphasize the detail, and neglect the ensemble; its gargoyles grin, no less than its saints aspire, it comprehends legend, poetry, and record of fact—but who shall say where legend ends and fact begins? On the other hand, it is rich, and varied, and alive; not all the forms are noble or beautiful, but most are interesting; and there is often a science of structure when least suspected, though sometimes instinctive, sometimes empirical, and sometimes insufficient, like that which left the tower of Beauvais a heap of ruined stones.

And as Gothic borrowed something from Byzantine art, so there are Oriental elements in mediæval literature—not only such as are derived from the Bible and the primitive liturgies, but those that came in with pilgrim, merchant, and Crusader, visible more especially in tale and romance.

The Gothic cathedrals of the consummated Middle Ages succeeded, and in some sense grew out of, the earlier Romanesque, with its obvious, if somewhat oppressive, structure and solidity. The Romanesque church embodies the classic principles illustrated by the Roman arch and the Roman basilica, just as Augustine and Bede continue the Roman literary tradition. The latter have more moderation, more severity, than a Bonaventura or a Richard Rolle. The cathedral is more florid, more airy, more gorgeous with flaming color than the Romanesque church; but it is more crumbling, and tends more swiftly to decadence and overthrow. The simpler Gothic runs apace into the Flamboyant, and lo, before one can realize it, it has slid into the earlier Renaissance. So it is with literature; so it is with society. Beauty flowers for a moment out of strength; but pass by a few days later, and the blossom is faded, the glory departed.

Thus far, however, we have been disregarding certain works which appear even in the high mediæval period, but which differ notably from those that we have been attempting to characterize. They are works of measure and sobriety, like those of classic antiquity, rigorously planned; in them every line is structural, and you must read every line in order to be impressed by the magnitude, the logic, or the splendor of the whole. Of these the supreme type is the Divine Comedy. True, the Divine Comedy has been compared to a cathedral, not without reason; but the Gothic cathedral was never finished; many accretions to its original design might have fallen out otherwise; it did not represent a basic style, out of which others might in due course proceed; it was not, in the same sense as the Romanesque, grounded, massive, eternal. In all these respects Dante's poem might be compared to the earlier form. No one has been able to suggest an essential improvement in it; in itself, and through its outgrowths, it dominates all later European poetry of the chivalrous or 'romantic' temper. The lineaments of Beatrice swim before every ardent Christian lover, and Stephen Phillips can still write of Paolo and Francesca.

Why has Dante this power and this permanence? Partly because he was Dante — that is, a genius; but also because, by his own avowal, he placed himself under the tutelage of Virgil, and hence of Homer.

In a measure, the same thing is true of Boccaccio. His long-winded romances have not endured; but the Decameron, written with classic restraint and finish, has not only survived, but is still a model of prose. If we meet with comparatively little of this sort in Middle English, it is because the Renaissance began to exert its power much earlier in Italy than in England, or even in France.

But if we may expect few well-rounded wholes in Middle English literature, we must recognize that the poetic faculty, released from the strenuous and incessant task of watching over the complete organism at every step, is the more free to abandon itself at any moment to the full tide of occasional sentiment — comic, pathetic, tender, or wistful. A piece otherwise marred by imperfections may thus have lovely or poignant bits, so irresistible as to suffuse a glow over the composition as a whole, and blind our eyes to the faults which readily disclose themselves to reflection. And since, speaking broadly, the demands that we may make upon Middle English literature are restricted by considerations of form, it is with peculiar satisfaction that we now and then come upon a complete piece, as in Chaucer at his best, that endures the most searching trials, and yields unalloyed pleasure at every reperusal. But such encounters in Chaucer cause a deeper regret that so large a part of his writing is fragmentary, that his assignment of the several Canterbury tales to the personages of the pilgrimage is not always convincing, and that his greatest work, when viewed in the light of his own avowed plan, remains a torso.

To begin, and never to end, or to end only by stopping when fatigue or caprice dictates; to project what can never be compassed, or what is amorphous in its very conception; to reveal beauty only in glimpses, anon to be swallowed in convention or dulness — this it is to belong to the typical Middle Age, oppressed and glorified by its sense of the infinite, and seeing visions of starry brightness projected against a background of violence and fraud, of triumphant injustice and unbearable oppression. The Crusades, the Hundred Years' War, typify in the world of action some of the literary and architectural phenomena that we have been attempting to describe — doomed to be abortive from their very nature, uninspired in many, perhaps most, of their particulars, but illumined by flashes of heroism and of generous sentiment, too fine to be steadily realized in the even course of a workaday world. In this respect the classic ideal, both of life and art, is more compassable, because more modest. Horace accomplishes what he undertakes more evenly, more uniformly, than Chaucer — yet shall I hesitate to say that some of us prefer Chaucer?

Whatever we may deny to our Middle English authors, in certain respects they are unrivaled. The wistfulness of regret for vanished glories, the sympathy with an outcast and bereaved wife, the mirthful interest in the mimic manhood of the barnyard, the joyous participation in the young life of the Maytime, the swift change by which the clowns and thieves of a Yorkshire moorside are transported to the Judean plains and the presence of the Divine Child in his sweet and touching innocence — these things have a perennial savor, a persistent appeal, even as the sorrows of Lear, the maiden grace of Miranda, the humors of Falstaff, or the piteous pleadings of Desdemona.

II. THE LANGUAGE

The letters are the same as in modern English (but see below), with the addition of \mathfrak{z} (\mathfrak{Z}), \mathfrak{p} (\mathfrak{p}), and \mathfrak{th} (\mathfrak{D}). \mathfrak{Z} (from an old manuscript-form of g) is used for modern English gh (often before t) and for y (at the beginning or end of a syllable). \mathfrak{p} (thorn) and \mathfrak{th} (eth, as in weather) represent th, and are used interchangeably with th and each other.

J is represented in the manuscripts by i, and v by u; so that, strictly speaking, j and v should be subtracted from the total number of letters. Y is very frequently used for i, and the two are virtually interchangeable as vowels.

PRONUNCIATION

There are two possible ways of pronouncing Middle English — one for quick understanding, the other for beauty. According to the first, one reads the text like so much modern English, at the same time converting the words, wherever possible, into their modern English forms. This answers sufficiently well in the case of prose, or of poetry written without much regard to metrical principles; but it should always be regarded as a makeshift, and, in the strict sense, as unscholarly. Perhaps the aptest apology for it would be found in our reading Shakespeare as modern English, in spite of the fact that to Shakespeare himself our modern pronunciation would, to a large degree, have seemed unintelligible or barbarous.

The second mode of pronunciation, essential to the just rendering of artistic verse, takes account of two things — strict metre, and the quite different values of certain letters, especially the vowels, from those of modern English. By attending to these, much Middle English poetry may be made beautiful to the ear which otherwise would sound commonplace or uncouth; and this result is quite worth the trouble involved.

The recognition of metrical technique in Middle English depends chiefly upon the pronunciation of final -e (besides -es, etc., in unstressed positions). As a rule, final -e is always to be regarded as forming a separate syllable; but before vowels, the commonest words beginning with h, and occasionally elsewhere, it is silent. The simplest rule is this: In verse, always pronounce final -e (-es, etc.) where it will conduce to the melody of the line, but suppress it in the comparatively rare instances where it does not. Such -e's are always to be pronounced like the -a in era or vista. The -e of -ed, -el, -en, -er is also to be suppressed when metre so requires.

Besides the final unstressed -e, there is also a stressed -e—often represented by -y in modern English; thus, cite (i.e. cité), city.

VOWELS

Short vowels are pronounced about as in modern English, but a nearly as ah (never like a in hat); o always rounded (produced with rounded lips; about like aw, but shorter), and never pronounced like a in modern ah; u as in pull, not as in dull. From the normal o is to be distinguished an o which is equivalent to u, and originally was u; it can be known by its always corresponding to the modern English o or u pronounced as u in sun: e.g. Middle English sonne, sone, love, etc. (OE. sunne, sunu, lufu, etc.), modern English sun, son, love, etc.

Long vowels are never pronounced as in modern English, but as in the European pronunciation of Latin, or approximately as in Italian, French, or German, thus:

a as in father

e (ee) close as in they

e (ee) open as in there

i as in pique

o close as in blow

o open as in broad

u as in rule

Close and open e can only be discriminated by the student of Old English; close o is oo in modern English, open o being o, oa, etc. The double vowels, ee and oo, merely indicate long e and o, and are never to be pronounced as in modern English.

DIPHTHONGS

The diphthongs ei and ui are to be pronounced like the first element followed by the second, and with the first element stressed. The remaining diphthongs are thus pronounced:

ai as in aisle

au (aw) as in house (Ger. Haus)

eu (ew) as in few

iu (iw) as in few

oi as in boil

ou (ow) as in boor, when now pronounced as in out, cow

ou (ow) as $\bar{o} + u$ (nearly as \bar{o}), in all cases but the preceding c pronounced as k or s, under the same circumstances as in modern English; ci not = sh, but = si (modern Eng. see) ch as in modern English, except before t, when it was pronounced like the ch in Ger. ich after e, i, or y, and like ch in Ger. auch after the other vowels

CONSONANTS

g as in gold, except occasionally as in gem; ght like cht (see above)

g initial = y; gt like cht

h final sometimes like the ch of cht: sih, purh

ht like cht

kn never like n, but = k + n

s like s between vowels, as in modern English

sch like sh

si not = sh, but = modern Eng. see

p, θ like th (both sounds) in modern English

tu not = chu: na-tu-re

Double consonants before a vowel are always pronounced twice: renne = ren + ne; thridde = thrid + de

INFLECTION

NOUNS

The genitive singular and the plural regularly end in -(e)s (occasionally -is, -us ; -(e)z); the dative in -e, or without ending. To such irregular plurals (identical with the singular) as occur in the Modern English sheep, swine, etc., add hors. Certain original feminines like lady, halle, sonne, sometimes retain the nominative form in the genitive singular; to these add the nouns of relationship, fader, brother, moder, etc., which, however, sometimes have -s. A few nouns of the Old English weak declension end in -n in the plural, like been, bees; yen, eyes (modern poetic eyne); schoon, shoes (modern poetic shoon), and are occasionally followed by others which more normally would end in -s (see, for example, Layamon).

ADJECTIVES

The plural and the dative singular of adjectives ending in a consonant are often formed by the addition of -e. When the adjective is preceded by the definite article, a demonstrative, or a possessive, -e is sometimes appended: the grete honour; his white baner.

PRONOUNS

The only forms which are not fairly self-explanatory are those of the feminine personal pronoun. The typical paradigm follows:

SING.	N.	h(e)o ; s(c)ho, s(c)he
	G.	hir(e), hur(e), her(e)
	D.
	A.	hi(e), hir(e), hur(e), her(e)
PLUR.	N.	h(i)e ; thei, thai
	G.	her(e), h(e)or(e) ; their(e)
	D.	he(o)m, hi(o)m ; the(i)m, tha(i)m
	A.

The plurals of the personal pronouns of all genders are identical with those of the feminine. The genitive and dative singular of hit, it, are the same as those of the masculine: his, him.

Tho and thos(e) are independent demonstratives, each meaning those.

VERBS

The normal endings of the verb (disregarding the subjunctive) are :

IND. PRES. SING.		1. -e
		2. -est
		3. -eth
	PLUR.	-e(n)
WEAK VERBS			STRONG VERBS

Of is sometimes contracted to o, as in modern Eng. o'clock, and on to a, as in aboard = on board.

The Northern till is equivalent to to.

Th is assimilated to t in atte = at the.

DIALECTS

The dialects are Northern, Midland, and Southern, the first of these including also the language of the Scottish Lowlands. The most important dialect with reference to modern English is the East Midland, in whose district lay the two universities, and eventually London. Examples of the various dialects in this book are: Northern: Barbour, The Bruce (pp. 238 ff.); Southern: Layamon, Brut (pp. 219 ff.); Midland: The Bestiary (pp. 316 ff.).

Initial v for f, and z for s, are marks of the Southern dialect.

One of the commoner marks of the Northern dialect is a for o in words like bald, bold; gast, ghost; wa, woe. Others are: initial ȝ for sh; k for ch (kirk, church). The Northern dialect has also a greater tendency to rid itself of inflectional endings and of final unstressed -e, has the present participle in -and(e) (Midland and Southern -inde, -ende, -inge), and to some extent has a peculiar vocabulary.

For fuller information about the dialects, see Emerson, Middle English Reader, 2d ed., New York, 1915, and Skeat, English Dialects, Cambridge (Eng.), 1911.

MIDDLE ENGLISH READER

ROMANCES

MALORY, MORTE DARTHUR

Sir Thomas Malory, knight, completed his romance, according to his own statement, between March 4, 1469 and March 3, 1470 (the ninth year of Edward IV). His home was at Newbold Revel, near Coventry, and five and a half miles northwest of Rugby, where he succeeded his father in 1433 or 1434. He was member of Parliament for Warwickshire in 1445, and died March 14, 1470 (according to Kittredge, Harvard Studies 5. 88 ff.). His book is mostly derived from a variety of French sources, though he occasionally adapts English poems. Whether the ultimate French originals had been digested into a single work which served as Malory's source has not been determined. The Morte Darthur was published by Caxton in 1485, and it is from Sommer's literal reprint that our text is derived. ✓

For the characterization of this romance we may borrow a few sentences from Andrew Lang (Le Morte Darthur, ed. Sommer, pp. xiv-xxi): 'There is no more strange fortune in literature than that which blended wild Celtic myths, and a monastic theory of the saintly life, with all of chivalrous adventure, with all of courtesy and gentleness that the Middle Ages could conceive, and handed it on to be the delight of the changing ages. . . . Malory has penned the great and chief romance of his own age and of ours, the story that must endure and must move the lacrymæ rerum till man's nature is altered again. . . . The Celtic legends, passed through the French mind, and rendered in Malory's English, have, what Homer lacks, the charm of mystery and distance, the background of the unknown. . . . Malory's book is a very complete and composite picture of a strangely inherited ideal; it is, indeed, "a jumble," but, of all jumbles, the most poetic and the most pathetic. . . . Malory is skilled "to teach men unto strange adventures," to instruct in all courage, chastity, endurance, and true love, nor can we estimate what his influence must have been in training the fathers of Elizabeth's Englishmen. . . . The style of Malory is, of course, based on the fresh and simple manner of his French originals. For an English style of his age, it is particularly fluent. . . . Perhaps it is just because he does follow a French copy, and so is familiar with words derived from the Latin, that Malory possesses his fluency and facility. . . . The manner and matter of Malory make him the most generally known of all old authors, except, of course, the translators of the Bible.'

LANCELOT AND ELAINE

Book 18, chaps. 18–20. Based upon the French prose romance of Lancelot (first half of the thirteenth century), and the fourteenth-century Morte Arthur contained in Harleian MS. 2252 of the British Museum (edited by Bruce for the E. E. T. S.; see also Hemingway's edition, Boston, 1912); but chapter 20 is almost wholly due to Malory. For details concerning the relation of our passage to the French Lancelot, see Sommer 3. 10, 222–8, 250; for the text of the OF. original, see Mort Artu, ed. Bruce, pp. 74 ff. For the general subject of Lancelot, see Jessie L. Weston's The Legend of Lancelot du Lac (London, 1901).

Tennyson's Lady of Shalott and Lancelot and Elaine are founded on Malory.

And so upon a morne they took their horses, and Elayne le Blank with them; and whan they came to Astolat, there were they wel lodged, and had grete chere of Syre Bernard the old baron, and of Sir Tyrre his sone. And so upon the morne, whan Syr Launcelot
 5 shold¹ departe, fayre Elayne brougt her fader with her, and Sir Lavayne and Sir Tyrre, and thus she said: 'My lord Syr Launcelot, now I see ye wylle departe, now, fayre knyghte and curtois knyghte, have mercy upon me, and suffer me not to dye for thy love.' 'What wold ye that I dyd?' said Syr Launcelot. 'I wold have you to my
 10 husbond,' sayd Elayne. 'Fair damoyssel, I thanke yow,' sayd Syr Launcelot, 'but truly,' sayd he, 'I cast² me never to be wedded man.' 'Thenne, fair knyght,' said she, 'wylle ye be my peramour?'³ 'Jesu defende me,' said Syr Launcelot, 'for thenne I rewarded⁴ your fader and your broder ful evylle for their grete goodenes.'
 15 'Allas,' sayd she, 'thenne must I dye for your love.' 'Ye shal not so,' said Syre Launcelot, 'for wete⁵ ye wel, fayr mayden, I myght have ben maryed and⁶ I had wolde,⁷ but I never applyed me to be Thenne the quene and alle that there were made the moost of hym 5 that they myghte. But the joye that La Beale Isoud made of Syr Tristram there myghte no tonge telle, for of alle men erthely she loved hym moost.

Thenne, upon a daye, Kynge Anguysshe asked Syr Tristram why he asked not his boon,⁴ for whatsoever he had promysed hym he 10 should have hit withoute fayle. 'Syre,' sayd Sire Trystram, 'now is hit tyme; this is alle that I wylle desyre, that ye wylle gyve me La Beale Isoud youre doughter, not for myself, but for myn unkel Kynge Marke, that shalle have her to wyf, for soo have I promysed hym.' 'Allas,' said the kynge, 'I had lever⁵ than alle the land that I have 15 ye wold wedde her youreself.' 'Syre, and I dyd, than I were shamed for ever in this world, and fals of my promyse. Therefore,' said Sire Trystram, 'I praye you hold your promyse that ye promysed me, for this is my desyre, that ye wylle gyve me La Beale Isoud to goo with me into Cornewaile, for to be wedded to Kynge Marke, myn unkel.' 20 'As for that,' sayd Kynge Anguysshe, 'ye shalle have her with you, to doo with her what it please you, that is for to saye yf that ye lyst⁶ to wedde her yourself, that is me levest⁷; and yf ye wille gyve her unto Kynge Marke, youre unkel, that is in youre choyse.'

Soo to make short conclusion, La Beale Isoud was made redy to 25 goo with Syre Trystram, and Dame Bragwayne wente with her for her chyef gentylwoman, with many other. Thenne the quene, Isouds moder, gaf to her and Dame Bragwayne, her doughters gentilwoman,

And thenne anone Syre Trystram tooke the see and La Beale Isoud; and whan they were in their caban, hit happed soo that they were thursty, and they sawe a lytyl flacke[t]¹ of gold stande by them, and hit semed by the coloure and the taste that it

Thenne Sire Trystram toke the flacke[t] in his hand, and sayd: 'Madame Isoud, here is the best drynke that ever ye drank, that Dame Bragwayne youre mayden, and Governayle my servaunt, have kepte for themself.' Thenne they lough and made good chere, and eyther dranke to other frely, and they thoughte never drynke

KING HORN

Mal. - 5. 11.

The romance probably antedates 1250; the Cambridge manuscript (1530 lines), here followed, may be dated about 1310. The best edition is by Joseph Hall (Oxford, 1901).

The story is of a prince, who, set adrift by conquering Saracens, lands in Westernesse, is loved by the king's daughter of that country, is banished when his love is discovered, returns in time to save her from another marriage, wins her for himself, and finally becomes king of his native land.

According to Hall (pp. liii-lvi): 'King Horn is essentially English, a plain impersonal tale, picturing a simple state of society, and full of primitive touches centuries older than its language, written in a metre which is a natural development of Old English prosody. . . . [The] poem, as we have it, is a story of the Danish raids on the south coast of England. It is, in the main, Teutonic in spirit and details: the names of the persons and places are mostly Teutonic, or assimilated to Teutonic forms. . . . Rimenhild and Aylmar, and his court on the banks of the Dorsetshire Stour, are English additions to the original story, and the real Westernesse is Ireland. Then all the localities and surroundings are Celtic. Murry . . . is king of Suddene, the country of the Southern Damnonii, that is, of Cornwall. . . . The banished Horn finds shelter at the court of an Irish king; with Irish troops, and accompanied by an Irish page, he recovers his father's kingdom. His rival is a Breton prince, Modi, king of Renns. These indications point to the conclusion that the story is originally a British tradition, arising out of some temporary success in which the Cornish, aided by the Irish, checked the westward progress of the English invader. It was annexed by some English poet, and recast to suit the similar position of his countrymen resisting the attacks of the Danes. Finally, it emerged at a much later date in the shape of the extant versions, under the impulse of the rising spirit of the English people recovering from the Norman Conquest, which found its peculiar literary expression in a whole cycle of outlaw and exile stories in verse and prose.

'The literary interest of King Horn may be characterized in few words. It is probably the earliest of the English romances, but as a specimen of the purely narrative sort it has great merit. In swift succession of brief and incisive speeches it tells a simple story effectively, without distraction of elaborate description or reflective comment. But the characters are very simply conceived, the female element is slight, and lovemaking is quite subordinate to fighting. Although picturesque and even poetic situations, such as Horn's farewell to his boat, are not wanting, the language is bald and unimaginative. A certain epic simplicity and energetic directness of expression, to which the short verse lends itself, are the main merits of its style.'

Our extract runs from line 445 to line 586. The earlier course of the story is as follows: Saracens kill King Murry of Suddene, and set adrift the young prince, Horn, and his companions. The latter are carried over the water to Westernesse, where King Aylmar receives them kindly, and bids the steward Athelbrus teach Horn the arts of harping and song, and train him to serve the wine and carve at table. Horn is soon loved by all the court, but especially by the king's daughter, Rymenhild. She bids the steward bring him to her chamber, but Athelbrus, in dread of the king's anger, brings instead Horn's companion, Athulf. To Athulf she gives her love, supposing him to be Horn, but Athulf finally explains the mistake, and she upbraids the steward. Athelbrus again promises to bring Horn, and this time really does so. Rymenhild declares her love to Horn, and offers to marry him. He gently declines, on the ground that he is unworthy by birth for the honor, whereupon she swoons. Horn is moved by her grief, and suggests that marriage might be possible if he were a knight.

HAVELOK THE DANE

Composed before 1300; the unique manuscript (3001 lines) is in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and may be dated about 1310. The English poem is probably a translation of a lost French one. The best recent editions are those by Holthausen (London, 1901) and Skeat (Oxford, 1902).

The story is of an exiled prince of Denmark, who becomes a servant at the English court, marries the princess of that country, and finally succeeds to the thrones of both Denmark and England.

'The historical source of the name and fame, and perhaps of the story of Havelok, has been traced to the life of Olaf Sitricson [see Dict. Nat. Biog.], a Danish prince, who, about the middle of the tenth century, reigned for a few years in Northumbria. . . . One of the strongest motives underlying the development of the Havelok legend may well have been political or national, namely, the desire of the Danes to prove their right to sovereignty in England' (Billings, pp. 18, 20).

The ancient town-seal of Great Grimsby, in Lincolnshire, embodies a manifest allusion to our story. The seal is described at length by J. Hopkin, as quoted in Skeat's edition (pp. liv-lvi), from which the following extract is taken: 'On the right hand of Gryme stands his protégé Haveloc ("Habloc"), whom, during one of his mercantile excursions soon after his arrival in Lincolnshire, Gryme had the good fortune to save from imminent danger of shipwreck, and who proved to be the son of Gunter, King of Denmark, and who was therefore conveyed to the British court, where he subsequently received in marriage Goldburgh, the daughter of the British sovereign. Above Gryme is represented a hand, being emblematical of the hand of Providence by which Haveloc was preserved, and near the hand is the star which marks the point where the inscription begins and ends. Haveloc made such a favorable representation of his preserver at the British and Danish courts that he procured for him many honors and privileges. From the British monarch Gryme, who had already realized an abundance of wealth, received a charter, and was made the chief governor of Grimsby; and the Danish sovereign granted to the town an immunity (which is still possessed by the burgesses of Grimsby) from all tolls at the port of Elsinour. Gryme afterwards lived in Grimsby like a petty prince in his hereditary dominions. Above Haveloc is represented a crown, and in his right hand is a battle-axe, the favorite weapon of the Northmen, and in his [left] hand is a ring which he is presenting to the British princess Goldburgh ("Goldebvrgh"), who stands on the left side of Gryme, and whose right hand is held towards the ring. Over her head is a regal diadem, and in her left hand is a sceptre. Sir F. Madden states that it is certain that this seal is at least as old as the time of Edward I (and therefore contemporaneous with the MS.), as the legend is written in a character which after the year 1300 fell into disuse, and was succeeded by the black letter, or Gothic.'

The mention of Elsinore (Elsineur) suggests the name of Hamlet; for the connection between his story and that of Havelok, see the introduction to Israel Gollancz's Hamlet in Iceland (London, 1898).

Our extract embraces lines 862-1281.

The earlier part of the story runs as follows: A good king of England, Athelwold, under whom the realm had been serenely peaceful and happy, lay at the point of death, with only an infant daughter, Goldborough, to succeed him. He called to him his lords and thanes, and bade them tell him to whom he might most safely entrust the kingdom until such time as his daughter could bear rule. They all declared that Earl Godrich was the man; and to him the child and the regency of the country were accordingly committed. But love of power made this man false; when Goldborough was twenty years old, he imprisoned her in a strong castle, and himself continued to rule.

Meanwhile, a similar story had been enacted in Denmark. Its king, Birka-beyn, had before his death entrusted his young son and two small daughters to a supposedly faithful vassal, Godard. The latter with his own hands killed two of the children, and ordered a fisherman, Grim, to drown the boy Havelok by the light of the moon. Grim carried Havelok home in a sack; but when he rose at midnight to drown the child, a bright and shining light streamed forth from the sack, and both Grim and his wife recognized this as a sign of royal blood in the boy. They fell on their knees before him, and promised faithful allegiance.

Soon after, Grim decided to flee from the country, and embarked in a boat with his wife, five children, and Havelok. Winds drove him to the coast of England, where he landed at the mouth of the Humber, and dwelt in a spot called, after him, Grimsby. Twelve years later, Havelok, now a well-grown youth, left the family of Grim to seek his fortune ; and at this point our selection begins.

In the manuscript, th is frequently found for ht and for t ; in such cases the change has been made without notice.

GOWER, CONFESSIO AMANTIS

John Gower — 'moral Gower,' as Chaucer called him — was born about 1330, and died between August 15 and October 24, 1408. He was of a Kentish family, a layman, and a man of some wealth. For the most part, he probably resided in London, and was personally known to Richard II. While living in Southwark, he married one Agnes Groundolf on January 25, 1397/8, and perhaps had been married before. He lies buried in St. Saviour's, Southwark, ✓ formerly called St. Mary Overey. The effigy of the poet, beneath a three-arched canopy, exhibits his head resting upon three volumes, bearing the names of his three principal works — Speculum Meditantis, Vox Clamantis, and Confessio Amantis.

Of these the first, now known as the Mirour de l'Omme (Speculum Hominis) has only recently been discovered. This is in French, the Vox Clamantis in Latin, and the Confessio Amantis in English. The French work was the earliest, the Latin work was produced about 1382, while the English work assumed its final form in 1393. The Confessio Amantis contains more than 33,000 lines, surpassing the Mirour de l'Omme by above 4000 lines. Besides these three, Gower wrote several minor works. The whole has been critically edited in four volumes by G. C. Macaulay (Oxford, 1899–1902). In the French and the Latin poems, Gower's tendency is markedly didactic. In the English poem his general theme is love, which he illustrates by a series of 112 stories.

Lowell said, in his essay on Chaucer: 'Gower has positively raised tediousness to the precision of a science.' A fairer judgment is that by Ker (English Literature, Mediæval, pp. 225–226): 'Gower should always be remembered along with Chaucer; he is what Chaucer might have been without genius and without his Italian reading, but with his critical tact, and much of his skill in verse and diction. The Confessio Amantis is monotonous, but it is not dull. Much of it at a time is wearisome, but as it is composed of a number of separate stories, it can be read in bits, and ought to be so read. Taken one at a time, the clear bright little passages come out with a meaning and a charm that may be lost when the book is read too perseveringly.'

The Apollonius of Tyre, the first of our extracts, was first written in Greek (probably third century), and afterwards translated into Latin. Gower paraphrased the Latin, and the Shakespearean (?) Pericles is, in turn, based upon

¹ so many times, so very² conceal³ knew

Gower. For further particulars concerning Apollonius, see my First Book in Old English, pp. 164-165.

The Æson story is derived from Ovid's Metamorphoses (7. 162-293), 132 lines of the original being expanded to 230. A portion of this Ovidian passage (Met. 7. 197 ff.), extremely condensed by Gower, reappears in Shakespeare's Tempest 5. 1. 33-50.

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT

Sir Gawain and the Green Knight (about 1380) has been called by Gaston Paris the jewel of English mediæval literature (Hist. Litt. de la France 30. 73), and by Schofield (Eng. Lit. from the Conquest to Chaucer, p. 215) 'incomparably the best of the English romances, and one of the finest in any language.' Of the unknown author Schofield adds: 'Next to Chaucer his contemporary, he is perhaps the greatest of our mediæval poets.'

The romance has been edited by Madden (Syr Gawayne), 1839, and by Morris (E.E.T.S. No. 4), 1864 (revised by Gollancz, 1897). For general accounts of the author and his work, see Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 357-373 (Gollancz), and Osgood's edition of The Pearl, pp. xi, xlvii-lix. A condensed prose version, by Jessie L. Weston, has been published by David Nutt, and there is a humorous adaptation of the poem in modern verse by Charlton M. Lewis (Gawayne and the Green Knight: a Fairy Tale), Boston, 1903.

The story is probably from a French or Anglo-Norman source; for analogues, see Madden's edition, pp. 305-307; M. C. Thomas, Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (Zurich, 1883), pp. 34-68; Gaston Paris, as above, 30. 75-77; Weston, pp. 88-102.

The incident of the beheading is found in the Fled Bricrend (translated in Irish Texts Soc., Vol. 2), an Irish tale at least as early as 1100, in which the hero Cuchulinn undergoes the test (Gaston Paris, p. 77; Weston, pp. 92 ff.).

It is an interesting fact that Richard de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick (1382-1439), a reputed descendant of the legendary Guy of Warwick, and 'a brave and chivalrous warrior in an age of chivalry,' entered the lists at Guines, near Calais, in the character of 'the grene knyght' on Jan. 6 (Twelfth Day) of either 1416 or 1417, and unhorsed a French knight, an exploit which he equaled on the two following days (Kittredge, Harvard Notes 5. 94-95). A recent article, dealing with the connection between this poem and the Order of the Garter, by Isaac Jackson, will be found in Anglia 37. 393-423; this author believes the date to be 1362. Chambers sees in the Green Knight a form of the fertilization-spirit (The Mediæval Stage 1. 117, 185-186).

The language of our author presents peculiar difficulties, as does that of the whole school of alliterative poets which flourished during the second half of the fourteenth and the early years of the fifteenth centuries. Of this school Gollancz (p. 373) considers that he may well have been the master.

The poem is long, and full of incident and description. Its story runs thus: While Arthur's court is feasting at Camelot on New Year's Day, a knight, all in green, and riding a green charger, rides into the hall. He challenges any knight present to give him a stroke with his battle-axe, on the understanding that it is to be rendered back to him a year later. All shrink back but Arthur's nephew, Gawain, who smites off the knight's head, whereupon the latter rides away with the head in his hand. Toward the end of the year, Gawain sets out to find the knight, whom he eventually encounters. After various temptations, he endures the return-blow—which, however, inflicts but a slight wound—and later goes back to Arthur's court. (For more extended analyses, see J. L. Weston, Legend of Sir Gawain, pp. 86-88; Schofield, pp. 215-217; Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 364-365; Morris' ed., pp. viii-xxi.)

Morris has thus summarized the part of the poem which precedes our first extract: 'Arthur, the greatest of Britain's kings, holds the Christmas festival at Camelot, surrounded by the celebrated knights of the Round Table, . . . and ladies the loveliest that ever had life. This noble company celebrate the New Year by a religious service, by the bestowal of gifts, and the most joyous mirth. Lords and ladies take their seats at the table—Queen Guenever, the grey-eyed, gaily dressed, sits at the dais. . . . Arthur, in mood as joyful as a child, . . . declares that he will not eat nor sit long at the table until some adventurous thing has occurred to mark the return of the New Year.

'The first course [is] announced with cracking of trumpets, with the noise of nakers and noble pipes.'

Our extracts are lines 130-249, 2212-2478. The final z (for s) at the end of words is frequently represented in the MS. by ȝ; here it is uniformly printed as z.

When the time of the return visit approaches (see introductory note), Gawain sets out, and on Christmas Eve reaches a castle, where he is hospitably received by its lord and lady. Here he learns that the Green Chapel, his destination, is only two miles distant, and accordingly accepts an invitation to stay till New Year's morning. During the host's hunting-expeditions, his wife makes love to Gawain, but is unsuccessful in her endeavors; the kisses she bestows upon him are by him passed on to the host at nightfall. However, Gawain does accept from the lady a green girdle, which is to render him secure from every danger. On his resort to the Green Chapel, he hears the sound as of a blade sharpened on a grindstone.

THOMAS OF ERCELDOUNE

There was a Thomas Rimor (Rymour) of Erceldoune (modern Earlstoun) in the thirteenth century, a Scotchman who obtained in the following century the reputation of a prophet. He cannot, however, have been the author of our romance, which must have been composed after 1401, and is assigned by the New English Dictionary to about 1425. The romance consists of three cantos, of which the first is devoted to the fairy tale here following, and the second and third to prophecies, or what purport to be such. Child thought that the prophecies were by an inferior hand, but Murray believes the whole romance to have been the work of a single poet. Curiously enough, the story is told partly in the first person, and partly in the third.

A ballad, founded on the romance (see Murray's edition, pp. lii, liii), is No. 37 of Child's collection, of which the first stanza runs in one version :

True Thomas lay oer yond grassy bank,
 And he beheld a ladie gay,
 A ladie that was brisk and bold,
 Come riding oer the fernie brae.

¹ ancient² the daughter of the Duchess of Tintagel³ noble⁴ Uther⁵ by⁶ noble⁷ now⁸ ask, bid⁹ wish¹⁰ refused him¹¹ embrace¹² commend each the other¹³ in the open (?)¹⁴ steed (lit. white steed)¹⁵ fortress¹⁶ hastens¹⁷ bright

Thomas still retains his power over the imaginations of men. Professor Dixon, of the University of Glasgow, has written a little play, called Thomas the Rhymer (Glasgow, 1911), and Kipling's Last Rhyme of True Thomas (1893) is one of his most spirited poems.

The scene of the poem is best described by Sir James Murray (pp. l, li of his edition): 'Eildon Tree, referred to in the Romance, and connected traditionally with Thomas's prophecies, stood on the declivity of the eastern of the three Eildon Hills. . . . Its site is believed to be indicated by the Eildon Stone, "a rugged boulder of whinstone" standing on the edge of the road from Melrose to St Boswell's, about a mile south-east from the former town, and on the ridge of a spur of the hill. "The view from this point," says a correspondent, "is unsurpassed; on the north you have the vale of Leader almost up to Earlston, and Cowdenknowes with its 'Black Hill' rising abruptly from the bed of the stream; while downward to Tweed the undulating expanse of woody bank is so beautiful, that in the time of the 'bonny broom,' I am often tempted to bend my steps to the spot, and 'lie and watch the sight,' from a spot once 'underneath the Eildon Tree.' In the close vicinity is the 'Bogle Burn,' a stream which rises on the slope of the Eastern Eildon, and flows down a deep glen into the Tweed a little to the north of Newtown St Boswell's." . . . About half a mile to the west of the Eildon Stone, and on the slope of the same hill, we find the "Huntlee bankis" of the old romance. The spot lies a little above the North British Railway, at the point where it is crossed by the road to St Boswell's already referred to, about a quarter of a mile after leaving Melrose Station. The field next the road and railway at this point (No. 2405 on the Ordnance Map) is called Monks' Meadow; and higher up the hill above this are two fields (Nos. 2548 and 2408) which have preserved the name of Huntlee Brae.'

The ordnance map in question is that of the Parish of Melrose (May, 1861), Sheet VIII. 5. The road leaves the market-place, and leads to Oakendean House; it touches a corner of 2405 just after it crosses the railway and strikes a little southeast. No. 2408 is directly south of 2405, about 120 yards from the road, by way of a row of trees. No. 2548 is directly south of 2408, and about 150 yards further. Directly east of 2548 is Corse Rig (2410), with a plantation of trees.

Sir Walter Scott's enthusiasm for the story is best shown by a passage or two from Basil Hall's journal for Dec. 30, 1824, as quoted in Lockhart's life of Scott: 'This morning Major Stisted, my brother, and I, accompanied Sir Walter Scott on a walk over his grounds, a distance of five or six miles. . . . Occasionally he repeated snatches of songs, sometimes a whole ballad, and at other times he planted his staff in the ground and related some tale to us, which, though not in verse, came like a stream of poetry from his lips. Thus, about the middle of our walk, we had first to cross, and then to wind down the banks of the Huntly Burn, the scene of old Thomas the Rhymer's interview with the Queen of the Fairies. Before entering this little glen, he detained us on the heath above till he had related the whole of that romantic story, so that by the time we descended the path, our imaginations were so worked upon by the wild nature of the fiction, and still more by the animation of the narrator, that we felt ourselves treading upon classical ground; and though the day was cold, the path muddy and scarcely passable, owing to the late floods, and the trees all bare, yet I do not remember ever to have seen any place so interesting as the skill of this mighty magician had rendered this narrow ravine, which in any other company would have seemed quite insignificant. . . . In the evening, . . . Sir Walter also read us, with the utmost delight, . . . the famous poem on Thomas the Rhymer's adventure with the Queen of the Fairies; but I am at a loss to say which was the most interesting, or even I will say poetical — his conversational account of it to us to-day on the very spot, Huntly Burn, or the highly characteristic ballad which he read to us in the evening.' On Scott's transfer of his supposititious 'Rhymer's Glen' to the Abbotsford estate, see Murray's edition, p. lii.

The complete romance exists in four manuscripts, of which the oldest and best, the Thornton MS. of Lincoln Cathedral, dates from 1430–1440. All were admirably edited by Dr. Murray in 1875 for the Early English Text Society (No. 61). Another edition, with a reconstructed text, is that by Professor Brandl (Berlin, 1880), with copious variants. The present text reposes upon the Thornton manuscript, as printed by Murray, but the spelling has been somewhat normalized, and an attempt has been made to eliminate certain manifest errors; this, therefore, is a restored text, and can not be depended upon for the exact manuscript readings. The editions of Murray and Brandl can be relied upon for detailed information upon all matters of interest.

AMIS AND AMILOUN

Amis and Amiloun (late thirteenth century) is ultimately derived from a Greek or Oriental source. The story represents the mediæval notion of an ideal friendship, capable of attaining supreme heights of devotion. Amiloun risks his life to save the honor of Amis by maintaining his friend's perjured word in a trial by combat, and afterwards suffers for his generosity by becoming a leper. As an outcast and beggar, with only one young page as companion, he is at length recognized by Amis, and lovingly cared for and comforted. When an angel declares to Amis in a dream that only by means of the blood of his two children can Amiloun be cured, he meets even this demand upon his friendship and gratitude. Then a miracle takes place. Each friend has done what the other's need called for, and their sins are now fully atoned for by self-sacrifice. The two slaughtered children are found alive, happily playing together, and the story ends in cheer.

There are versions in Old French, Latin, Old Norse, and Celtic. The English romance is closely related to an Anglo-Norman poem printed by Kölbing, who has elaborately edited the English text (Altenglische Bibliothek, Vol. 2, Heilbronn, 1884), closely following the Auchinleck manuscript. The language is Northeast Midland. For a good outline, see Ten Brink, Early Eng. Lit., pp. 250-2.

Our extract covers lines 2245-2424.

SIR ORFEO

Sir Orfeo (about 1320) is a classical fable metamorphosed into a fairy tale, told in the manner of a Breton lay. Orpheus, like the banished Duke in As You Like It, resorts to the fields and woods for a season, after Eurydice is borne away; but she is restored to him, he regains his kingdom, and they live long afterwards. Ker says of the lay (English Literature: Medieval, p. 127; see also Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 328): 'One may refer to it as a standard, to show what can be done in the mediæval art of narrative, with the simplest elements and smallest amount of decoration. It is minstrel poetry, popular poetry — the point is clear when King Orfeo excuses himself to the King of Faerie by the rules of his profession as a minstrel; that was intended to produce a smile, and applause perhaps, among the audience. But though a minstrel's poem, it is far from rude, and it is quite free from the ordinary faults of rambling and prosing, such as Chaucer ridiculed in his Geste of Sir Thopas. It is all in good compass, and coherent; nothing in it is meaningless or ill-placed.'

A ballad on the theme is No. 19 of Child's collection.

Our text follows Zielke's print (Breslau, 1880) of the Auchinleck manuscript (with lines 1-24, 33-46 supplied from Harl. MS. 3810), but the punctuation has been freely altered. Occasional variations from Zielke's readings are noted.

CHAUCER, SIR THOPAS

Sir Thopas is well characterized by Ker (English Literature: Medieval, pp. 129-31): 'Chaucer's burlesque is easily misunderstood. It is criticism, and it is ridicule; it shows up the true character of the common minstrelsy — the rambling narrative, the conventional stopgaps, the complacent childish vanity of the popular artist who has his audience in front of him, and knows all the easy tricks by which he can hold their attention. . . . Chaucer has made a good thing out of the rhyme doggerel, and expresses the pleasant old-fashioned quality of the minstrels' romances, as well as their absurdities. His parody touches on the want of plan and method and meaning in the popular rhymes of chivalry; it is also intended as criticism of their verse. That verse . . . is technically called rime coulée or "tail-rhyme." . . . It very readily becomes monotonous and flat. . . . But it is a form of stanza which may be so used as to escape the besetting faults; the fact that it has survived through all the changes of literary fashion, and has been used by poets in all the different centuries, is something to the credit of the minstrels, as against the rude common-sense criticism of the Host of the Tabard when he stopped the Rime of Sir Thopas.' Skeat also is tempted to break a lance in behalf of the poem (Chaucer, Works 3. 424): 'I cannot quite resist the suspicion that Chaucer may himself, in his youth, have tried his hand at such romance-writing in all seriousness, but lived to have a good-humored laugh even in some degree at his own expense; and he seems as if endeavoring to make his readers feel that they could wish there was somewhat more of it.'

For the parodies in detail, see Bennewitz' dissertation (Halle, 1879); Kölbing's article in Englische Studien, Vol. 11; and Skeat's notes. Our text in general follows Skeat.

For Chaucer in general, see Root, The Poetry of Chaucer (Boston, 1906), Legouis, Geoffrey Chaucer (London, 1913), or Jusserand, Lit. Hist. Eng. People 1. 267-343. To the investigator, Miss Hammond's Chaucer: a Bibliographical Manual (New York, 1908) is indispensable.

15. The romance of Horn appears in two forms, King Horn (see p. 11) and Horn Childe. Chaucer probably refers to Horn Childe.

The romance of Sir Ypotis has not much in common with the others mentioned here; in it the Emperor Adrian interrogates the child Ypotis as to matters of God's law.

16. Sir Bevis of Hampton and Sir Guy of Warwick are two of the longest and dullest of mediæval romances.

17. Sir Libeux: a romance entitled Lybeaus Disconus (The Fair Unknown). — Pleyndamour: no romance of this name is known; the original must have been in French.

THE TALE

Ther was in Asie, in a greet citee,

 Sustened by a lord of that contree
 20 For foule usure and lucre of vilanye,
 Hateful to Crist and to his companye;
 And thurgh the strete men mighte ryde or wende,
 For it was free, and open at either ende.

A litel scole of Cristen folk ther stood

 Children an heep,⁵ ycomen of Cristen blood,
 That lerned in that scole yeer by yeer

THE IMPRISONED WIFE

The Seven Sages of Rome, from which this story is taken, is the European counterpart of the Oriental Book of Sindibād, ultimately, according to general scholarly belief, of Indian origin. The Book of Sindibād exists in a number of versions (Hebrew, Greek, Syriac, Persian, etc.), and the European Seven Sages in many more, the latter being found in one or more forms in almost every language of Europe. As late as 1892 a Lithuanian version was printed at Plymouth, Pennsylvania.

How the Oriental outline of the story was carried westward is a matter of conjecture. Since only four of the fifteen tales in the European collection are similar to those in any Eastern versions, it has been supposed that the transmission was probably oral, and a crusader returning from the Holy Land has been suggested as the possible transmitter. In any case, the most important element borrowed from the East is the frame or general plan of a series of tales told by seven wise men in defending a young prince against the accusations of the queen, his stepmother, and the tales told by the queen in reply. Like the frames of The Arabian Nights, of Boccaccio's Decameron, of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, and of more modern groups, down to Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn, this serves not only as a device by which to unite a number of tales, but also to account in some measure for the general character of the tales themselves.

The following selection is from the Cottonian manuscript of the Middle English version (British Museum Cotton Galba E. 9). This manuscript (apparently copied from a lost earlier one) has been dated as of the first third of the fifteenth century. For a full discussion of dates and other details, and The Seven Sages of Rome in general, see the edition by Killis Campbell (Ginn, 1907), from which our text (including lines 3236–3726 of the poem), with certain emendations and changes of punctuation, is taken.

Among the most interesting analogues and variants of our Inclusa-story (which is not one of those found in the Oriental versions) are Plautus, Miles Gloriosus (cf. Act 2); Boiardo, Orlando Innamorato 1. 22; The Thousand and One Nights, ed. Habicht, 11. 140; Campbell, Popular Tales of the West Highlands 1. 281.

DAME SIRITH

Dame Sirith is preserved in Digby MS. 86, which has been assigned to a date between 1272 and 1283, but by some as late as 1300.

With respect to the introduction of such fabliaux into England, Jusserand says (Lit. Hist. Eng. People 1. 225): "'Merry England" became acquainted with every form of French mirth; she imitated French chansons, and gave a place in her literature to French fabliaux. Nothing could be less congenial to the Anglo-Saxon race than the spirit of the fabliaux. This spirit, however, was acclimatized in England; and, like several other products of the French mind, was grafted on the original stock. The tree thus bore fruit which would never have ripened as it did, without the Conquest. Such are the works of Chaucer, of Swift perhaps, and of Sterne. The most comic and risqué stories, those same stories meant to raise a laugh which we have seen old women tell at parlor windows, in order to cheer recluse anchoresses, were put into English verse, from the thirteenth to the fifteenth century. Thus we find under an English form such stories as the tale of "La Chienne qui pleure" [Dame Sirith], etc.

With respect to Dame Sirith, Ker says (English Literature: Medieval, p. 172): 'This is far above the ordinary level of such things; it is a shameful practical joke, but there is more in it than this; the character of Dame Sirith, in her machinations to help the distressed lover of his neighbour's wife, is such as belongs to comedy and to satire, not to the ordinary vulgar "merry tale."'

The germ of the story has been traced back to India, where a belief in metempsychosis is prevalent, and thence passes on to the Persian (Book of Sindibad), the Arabic (see Clouston's Book of Sindibad, pp. 162 ff.) and the Hebrew (Mischle Sindbad, tr. Cassel, pp. 268 ff.). About 1100 it is found in the Disciplina Clericalis of Petrus Alphonsus, a converted Spanish Jew, with which compare Gesta Romanorum, chap. 28 (of the Latin). The English version here printed bears a rather close resemblance to that in the Greek Syntipas (ed. Eberhard, Fabulae Romanenses Graece Conscrip̃tae, Leipzig, 1879). For other versions, and the transmission of the story in general, see Mätzner, Altenglische Sprachproben 1. 103-5; Elsner, Untersuchungen zu dem Mittel-englischen Fabliau 'Dame Siriz', Berlin, 1877; McKnight, Middle English Humorous Tales in Verse (Boston, 1913), pp. xxi-xxxvii, 83-5.

This tale has many points of resemblance with a fragmentary interlude printed below (pp. 477-80). It has been conjectured that both have a common source in an interlude now lost (see Heuser, in Anglia, Vol. 30, and McKnight, pp. xxxviii–ix).

The name of the old woman is sometimes found in the manuscript as Siriz (147 25, 148 4, 157 6, 8) and sometimes as Sirib (150 7, 151 28, 153 1), but the rhymes show that the latter is undoubtedly correct (151 28; cf. 148 4); wib is similarly written wiz (148 5).

ROBIN HOOD AND THE MONK

This poem, though unmistakably a ballad, tells a story, and is therefore here classed as a tale, though perhaps it has nearly equal claim to be called a romance. It is one of the few ballads of whose early date we are assured, the manuscript being of about 1450. It is No. 119 of Child's great collection (3. 94-101); see also Sargent and Kittredge's edition in one volume, pp. 282-6. I omit stanzas 30-8, 53-66, both inclusive, and the end, stanzas 83-90. There is an unfortunate break after the first two lines of stanza 30, due to the loss of a sheet of the manuscript.

What Gummere says of ballads in general (Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 2. 474; the whole chapter should be read) is true of this in particular: 'They give a hint of primitive and unspoiled poetic sensation. . . . They can tell a good tale. They are fresh with the open air; wind and sunshine play through them.' For myself, I may add that the two opening stanzas of this ballad seem to me of peculiar loveliness.

In somer, when þe shawes¹ be sheyne,²
 And leves be large and long,
 Hit is full mery in feyre foreste
 10 To here þe foulis song;

 To se þe dere draw to þe dale,
 And leve þe hilles hee,
 And shadow hem in þe leves grene,
 Under the grenewode tre.

 Litull John can sey,
 ' And thynk hit is a full fayre tyme

There is a break in the manuscript two lines after this point, but it is evident from what follows that Robin Hood's men in some way learn of his capture. All of them are utterly distracted by this news save Little John, who feels sure that 'our Lady' will care for her servant. He himself will see to the monk.

Little John and Much then carry to the king the letters taken from the monk's body, conveying the tidings of Robin's capture. The king rejoices at this news, gives the men twenty pounds as a reward, and makes them yeomen of the crown. He then bids Little John bear his privy seal to the sheriff of Nottingham, commanding that Robin Hood be brought to him, alive and uninjured.

The scheref made John gode chere,

Eight stanzas remain. Word of the escape is carried to the king, who declares that, though Little John has beguiled both the sheriff and himself, he has been true to Robin Hood.

KING ROBERT OF SICILY

This is the poem from which Longfellow drew the Sicilian's tale, in the first series of his Tales of a Wayside Inn. Leigh Hunt related the story in prose in his Jar of Honey from Mount Hybla (1848); a play was founded on it in the reign of Henry VII, and acted at Chester in 1529 (Ward, Hist. Eng. Dram. Lit. 1.93-4; Collier, Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, London, 1831, 1. 113-5; 2. 128, 415; Hazlitt, Rem. Early Pop. Poetry, London, 1864, 1. 264-88); and Rudolf Schmidt drew from it his drama, Den Forvandlede Konge, which appeared in 1876, and was several times played at Copenhagen. Closely allied to our Middle English poem is Jean de Condé's (fl. 1310-1340) Li Dis dou Magnificat (Dits et Contes de Baudouin de Condé et de son Fils, Jean de Condé, ed. Scheler, Brussels, 1866, 2. 355-70, 455 ff.). The former, however, has been influenced by the romance of Robert the Devil (cf. Varnhagen, Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn, Berlin, 1884, pp. 43-7), from which the king's name, Robert, may come, together with certain traits of his life as fool; Robert the Devil, like the king, reaches Rome on Maundy Thursday.

The tale appears in numerous versions, European and Asiatic. One set of the European versions derives from the story of Jovinian in the Gesta Romanorum. Much earlier is the Jewish legend, which occurs in four versions (Jerusalem and Babylonian Talmuds, Kabbala, etc.), one of which connects the story with Jer. 9. 23, instead of with the Magnificat. On the Hebrew are founded an Arabic and a Turkish version, and the former, in turn, may have been influenced by the Hindoo belief in metempsychosis (see Varnhagen, op. cit., and his Ein Indisches Märchen auf seiner Wanderung, Berlin, 1882).

Our text (lines 90–199, 383–416) is taken from Horstmann, Sammlung Altenglischer Legenden (Heilbronn, 1878). The poem must be earlier than 1370, the approximate date of the Vernon manuscript.

The first part of the poem may be summarized as follows: King Robert of Sicily was brother to Pope Urban and Emperor Valmond (not historical), and was proud to think that he had no equal. On Midsummer Night (June 24) he went to vespers, and heard a verse of the Magnificat — Deposuit potentes de sede, et exaltavit humiles — which he made a clerk translate to him, and then scoffed at it. In church he fell asleep, and when vespers were over was left there alone, his place with the court being taken by an angel who assumed his appearance. At length the king wakes, cries out for his men, and is roughly accosted by the sexton, who, finally, thinking him to be mad, opens the church-door.

The story continues thus: The new king gave Sicily an angelic government for more than three years — almost four, it would seem. At length — in April it was — he received a letter from Valmond, inviting him to Rome for Maundy Thursday. Thither the king went, and in his train the fool, the latter in a garment decorated with fox-tails, the angel in white samite set with pearls, and on a white steed. The deposed Robert appeals to his brothers in

THE FOX AND THE WOLF

The Fox and the Wolf is found in the same manuscript as Dame Sirith, and may therefore be assigned to the same date. It is a humorous beast-tale, a species of which this is the only English representative before the time of Chaucer. A version is to be found in Harris' Uncle Remus Stories, under the title, 'Old Mr. Rabbit, he's a Good Fisherman.' For the bibliography of the subject, see McKnight, Middle English Humorous Tales in Verse (D. C. Heath & Co., 1913).

Of the Roman de Renard, to which our poem is related, Jusserand says (i. 152): 'Superb manuscripts were illustrated for the libraries of the nobles; the incidents of this epic were represented in tapestry, sculptured on church stalls, painted on the margins of English missals. At the Renaissance, Caxton, with his Westminster presses, printed a Renard in prose.'

The dialect is Southern — vox for fox, etc.; and v is sometimes represented by w. The misplacement of h, now a mark of Cockney speech, is frequent.

⁵ the Archbishop of Canterbury, as a manuscript note explains

CHRONICLES

LAYAMON, BRUT

Our chief information concerning Layamon is derived from the first extract printed below. In the later manuscript, 'Lagamon' is 'Laweman'; and indeed the word means 'lawman,' a kind of magistrate. 'Ernlege' is Ar(e)ley Regis, or King's Ar(e)ley, just south of Stourport, where the Stour joins the Severn, and about ten miles north (slightly northwest) of Worcester. 'Radestone' is Redstone, a high cliff in the neighborhood.

Layamon goes on to say that it came into his mind to relate the history of England from the beginning, and that, in order to this, he journeyed up and down the country to procure the books he needed. Though he carries his story only down to 689, it consists of some 16,120 long lines, written about 1205. His chief source was Wace's Roman de Brut (1205), yet the earlier manuscript of Layamon contains, according to B. S. Monroe (Modern Philology 4. 567), only 87 French words. In common with Wace, or rather through Wace, he is ultimately dependent on Geoffrey of Monmouth's Histories of the Kings of Britain (before 1148), the ultimate source of so much romance dealing with 'the matter of Britain.' Geoffrey's book has been excellently translated by Sebastian Evans (Temple Classics).

Of the two manuscripts, the second may be a half century or so later than the first. Our extracts are taken from the first, as given in the standard edition, Madden's (3 vols., London, 1847), with the latter's short lines printed as long ones (but Madden's numbering is retained). For further information, see the preface to Madden's edition; the Dict. Nat. Biog.; Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 260-4; Monroe, Jour. Eng. and Germ. Phil. 7. 139-41 (bibliography).

THE BUILDING OF LONDON

Lines 1985–2060 (Madden 1.84–7). Cf. Geoffrey 1.17. 224 5–10 may be compared with the ultimate original in Geoffrey of Monmouth, with Robert of Gloucester's version of the latter, with Wace's expansion, and with Robert of Brunne's rendering of Wace:

Geoffrey of Monmouth 1.16: 'Amœno tamen situ locorum et piscosorum fluminum copia, nemoribusque præelecta.'

Robert of Gloucester, Chronicle (ca. 1300) 484–7:

þo Brut and is men þus come verst to londe,
 Hii wende aboute wide inou, þe contreies vor to fonde;
 Gret plente hii founde of fiis, as hii wende bi þe weie,
 Of wodes and of rivers, as is in þe contreie.

Wace, Brut 1245–1250:

Brutus esgarda les montaignes,
 Vit les valées, vit les plaines,
 Les marines et les boscages,
 Et les éves et les rivages;
 Vit les cans et les praaries;
 Vit les tères bien gaagnies.

Robert (Manning) of Brunne (1338) 1889–1894:

Brutus byhel[d] þe mountaynes,
 And avised hym o þe playnes;
 Biheld þe wodes, watres, and ffen,
 Where esyest wony[n]g were for men;
 Als watres ronnen wel, he byheld,
 And mede wiþ þe cryed feld.

THE OLD ENGLISH CHRONICLE: THE REIGN OF STEPHEN (A.D. 1137)

The Old English Chronicle is of priceless value for the early history of England. Toward the end the language passes over into an early form of Middle English. Modern historians have often drawn upon this passage in characterizing the reign of Stephen.

Our text is from Two Saxon Chronicles Parallel, ed. Plummer and Earle, pp. 263-5, with contractions expanded.

BARBOUR, THE BRUCE

The Bruce was composed in 1375 by a northern contemporary of Chaucer, John Barbour (1320(?)–1395), who was for thirty-eight years archdeacon of Aberdeen. Of Barbour's life comparatively little is known, but we learn that he received permits from the king to study at Oxford and in France, and was granted various pensions. Besides the Bruce, he wrote a poem called The Brut, and a genealogy of the Stuart family, both of which are lost.

The Bruce is called by its author a romance, though it has often been dealt with and criticized as history. 'We are hardly to regard it in the light of an exact history, but rather as a succession of episodes telling us various stories about the great perils and adventures of the heroes, the chief of whom are Robert Bruce, his brother Edward, Sir James Douglas, and Sir Thomas Randolph, afterwards Earl of Murray' (Skeat), the period covered being 1286-1332. The poem is divided into twenty books, and is written in the dialect of southern Scotland. While certain parts of it are undeniably tedious, it is of real interest for its national spirit, and has been influential upon so late a fellow-countryman of Barbour's as Sir Walter Scott. Barbour's unique position is that 'of being the father both of vernacular Scottish poetry and Scottish history' (Dict. Nat. Biog.).

Our text is taken from that of Skeat, as edited for the Scottish Text Society (Edinburgh, 1894), with the omission of square brackets, substitution of s for ss (representing a single sound), and writing of n̄ as n, etc. Skeat's text is based on the Edinburgh manuscript, written in 1489, collated with the Cambridge MS. G. 23, and with several early editions. Our selections include lines 353-406 of Book 1, 352-452 of Book 10, and 18-49, 139-66, and 272-323 of Book 13. It is to be noted that v and w are frequently interchanged.

THE BATTLE OF BANNOCKBURN (A.D. 1314)

The closing incident of this selection may be compared with Scott's adaptation of it in The Lord of the Isles 6. 31-2. The story of the campaign, with a survey of the related events and conditions, has been told by W. M. Mackenzie, The Battle of Bannockburn: A Study in Mediæval Warfare (Glasgow, 1913).

STORIES OF TRAVEL

SIR JOHN MANDEVILLE

The work which passes under the name of Sir John Mandeville was probably the production of a certain Jean de Bourgogne, called the Bearded, who died at Liège on November 17, 1372. According to the chronicle composed by Jean d'Outremeuse (1338-1399), this Jean de Bourgogne styled himself in his will Jean de Mandeville, and revealed on his deathbed to the chronicler that, having had the misfortune to kill an earl in his own country, England, he had bound himself to traverse three parts of the world. His tomb was to be seen at Liège till 1798, with an inscription which ran (Dict. Nat. Biog. 36. 26): 'Hic jacet vir nobilis Dom. Joannes de Mandeville, alias dictus ad Barbam, Miles, Dominus de Campdi, natus de Anglia, medicinæ professor, devotissimus orator, et bonorum suorum largissimus pauperibus erogator, qui, toto quasi orbe lustrato, Leodii diem vitæ suæ clausit extremum, A.D. MCCCLXXII, mensis Nov. die XVII.'

Whatever traveling Mandeville (or Bourgogne) may have done, almost his whole work is a tissue of borrowings and adaptations from such writings as William of Boldensele's Itinerary (published 1336), Odoric of Pordenone's Itinerary (1330), Hetoun the Armenian's History of the Orient (1307), the so-called Epistle of Prester John, etc. The work was first written in French, and afterwards translated into English, Latin, and a variety of other languages.

Dr. Warner says (Dict. Nat. Biog. 36. 28): 'Avowedly written for the unlearned, and combining interest of matter and a quaint simplicity of style, the book hit the popular taste. . . . No mediæval work was more widely diffused in the vernacular.' Some three hundred manuscripts are said to be in existence. There are three English versions, of which two, both contained in manuscripts of 1410-1420, are superior to the other. One of these (in Cotton MS. Titus 6. 16) is the text generally found in print; the other, in Northern dialect (in Egerton MS. 1982), was published by G. F. Warner in 1889, with an excellent introduction and notes, and is that from which our extracts are taken. For fuller accounts see Encyc. Brit. and Dict. Nat. Biog. s.v.; Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 2. 90-100.

THE REBIRTH OF THE PHOENIX

Text, p. 25. In order to show the relation of the English translation to the original, a passage of the French text printed by Dr. Warner is here reproduced; but it must be understood that this undoubtedly differs from the precise text on which the present English version is based:

THE PARADISE OF THE OLD MAN OF THE MOUNTAIN

Text, pp. 137–8. Almost any encyclopædia, and the larger dictionaries under the word 'Assassin,' will give some information on the matter of this section. The Assassins were so called because they were intoxicated with hashish (see the 'maner of drinke' below). Mandeville draws from Odoric (Yule, Cathay 1. 153–5) or Marco Polo (Book 1, chap. 22); see Yule's notes to, both. The 'old man,' or sheikh, derived his title from the mountainous region south of the Caspian which was under his sway. In particular, he had a mountain castle at Alamūt in the Elburz range, some ninety miles northwest of Teheran, and just south of a line joining Teheran and Rasht. The rise of this power may be assigned to 1090, or thereabouts, and the destruction of the castles where the sheikhs held sway to about 1256.

THE FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH

Text, p. 84. Mandeville is here indebted to the so-called Letter of Prester John, extant before 1177. The Latin runs (Zarncke, Der Priester Johannes, in Abh. Phil.-Hist. Classe der Königl.-Sächs. Ges. der Wiss., Vol. 7, Leipzig, 1879, pp. 912-3): 'Quod nemus situm est ad radicem montis Olimpī, unde fons perspicuus oritur, omnium in se specierum saporem retinens. Variatur autem sapor per singulas horas diei et noctis, et progreditur itinere dierum trium non longe a Paradyso, unde Adam fuit expulsus. Si quis de fonte illo ter jejunos gustaverit, nullam ex illa die infirmitatem patietur, semperque erit quasi in ætate XXX duorum annorum, quamdiu vixerit.' The European notions of the Fountain of Youth all go back to this, according to E. W. Hopkins ('The Fountain of Youth,' in Jour. Am. Or. Soc. 26 (1905). 32 ff.).

THE EARTH IS ROUND

Text, pp. 90-2

And ȝe schall understand þat in þis land, and in many oþer þareaboutes, men may noȝt see þe sterne¹ þat es called Polus Articus, whilk standes even north and stirrez never, by whilk schippemen er 10 ledd, for it es noȝt sene in þe south. Bot þer es anoþer sterne, whilke es called antartic, and þat es even agayne² þe toþer sterne; and by þat sterne er schippemen ledd þare, as schippemen er ledd here by Polus Articus. And, riȝt as þat sterne may noȝt be sene here, on þe same wyse þis sterne may noȝt be sene þare. And þareby may men 15 see wele þat þe werld es all rounde; for parties³ of þe firmament whilk may be sene in sum cuntree may noȝt be sene in anoþer. And þat may men prove þus. For, if a man myȝht fynd redy schipping and gude company, and þerto had his hele,⁴ and wald ga to see þe werld, he myȝht ga all aboute þe werld, bathe aboven and benethe.
20 And þat prufe I þus, after⁵ þat I hafe sene. For I hafe bene in Braban,⁶ and sene by þe astrolaby⁷ þat þe pole artyc es þare liii degrees hegh, and in Almayne⁸ towardes Boem⁹ it has lviii degrez, and forþermare¹⁰ toward þe north it has lxii degrez of height and sum mynutes. All þis I persayved by þe astrolaby. And ȝe schall under-25 stand þat in þe south, even ynentes¹¹ þis sterne, es þe sterne þat es called pole antartic. Þise twa sternes stirrez never mare; and aboute þaim movez þe firmament, as a qwhele¹² duse aboute ane axeltree.
And so þe lyne þat es betwene þise twa sternes departez¹³ all þe firmament in twa partes, ayther ylike mykill.¹⁴ Afterwardes I went toward

þe south, and I fand þat in Liby¹ seez men first þe sterne antartyke ; and, as I went ferrer, I fand þat in hie Liby it hase in height xviii de-greez and sum mynutes, of whilke mynutes lx makez a degre. And so, passand by land and by see toward þe cuntree þat I spakk off are,² and oþer landes and iles þat er bezond, I fand þat þis sterne 5 antartik had in height xxxiii degreez. And, if I had had cumpany and schipping þat wald hafe gane ferrer, I trow forsothe þat we schuld hafe sene all þe roundeness of þe firmament, þat es to say bathe þe emisperies,³ þe uppermare and þe nedermare.⁴ For, as I sayd ȝow before, halfe þe firmament es betwene þise twa sternes ; þe whilk I 10 hafe sene. . . . And þerfore I say sikerly þat a man myght go all þe werld aboute, bathe aboven and bynethe, and comme agayne to his awen cuntree, so þat he had his hele, gude schipping, and gude company, as I said before. And all way he schuld fynd men, landes, and iles and citeez and townes, as er in þir cuntrees. For ȝe wate wele 15 þat þase men þat dwellez even under þe pole antartyk er fote agayne fote to þase þat dwellez even under þe pole artyke, als wele as we and þase men þat dwellez agaynes us er fote agayne fote ; and rigt so it es of oþer parties of þe werld. For ilke a party of þe erthe and of þe see hase his contrary of thinges, whilk er even⁵ agaynes him. 20
 And ȝe schall understand þat, as I conjecture, þe land of Prestre John, Emperour of Inde, es even under us. For, if a man schall ga fra Scotland or Ingland unto Jerusalem, he sall ga all way upward. For oure land es þe lawest⁶ party of þe west, and þe land of Prestre John es in þe lawest party of þe este. And þai hafe day when we hafe nyght, 25 and nyght when we hafe day. And, als mykill as a man ascendes upward oute of oure cuntreez to Jerusalem, als mykill schall he go dounward to þe land of Prestre John ; and þe cause es for þe erthe and þe see er rounde. For it es þe comoun worde þat Jerusalem es in myddes of þe erthe ; and þat may wele be proved þus. For, and a 30 man þare take a spere and sett it even in þe erthe at midday, when þe day and þe nyght er bathe ylyke lang, it makez na schadowe till na party.⁷ And David also beres witnes þeroff, þare he saise : Deus autem

 Prestre John dounward fra Jerusalem. And so he may ga into þase iles envirounand all þe roundness of þe erthe and of þe see, till he com even under us. And þerfore I hafe ofttymes thought on a tale þat
 I herd, when I was zung, how a worthy man of oure cuntree went 10 on a tyme for to see þe werld; and he passed Inde³ and many iles byzonde Inde, whare er ma þan v^m 4 iles, and he went so lang by land and by see, envirounand þe werld, þat he fand ane ile whare he herd men speke his awen langage. For he herd ane⁵ dryfe bestez, sayand to þam swilke wordes as he herd men say til oxen in his awen cun-
 15 tree gangand at þe plugh; of whilk he had grete mervaile, for he wist nozt how it myght be. Bot I suppose he had so lang went⁶ on land and on see, envirounand þe werld, þat he was commen in to his awen marchez⁷; and, if he had passed forþermare, he schuld hafe commen even to his awen cuntree. Bot for he herd þat mervaile, and myght had a grete travaile. And it befell efterward þat he went into Norway; and a tempest of wynd in þe see drafe him, so þat he arryved in ane ile. And, when he was þare, he wist wele it was þe ile in whilk he had bene before and herd his awen speche, as men drafe bestez.

THE TERRESTRIAL PARADISE

Text, pp. 149–50. To afford an opportunity of comparison with the current Southern text, the beginning of this section is here transcribed from Halliwell's reprint (London, 1839, p. 303), with changes in capitalization: 'And begonde the lond and the yles and the desertes of Prestre Johnes lordschipe, in goynge streyght toward the est, men fynde nothing but mountaynes and roches fulle grete: and there is the derke regyoun, where no man may see, nouthur be day ne be nyght, as thei of the contree seyn. And that desert and that place of derknesse duren fro this cost unto Paradys Terrestre, where that Adam, oure foremost fader, and Eve weren putt, that dwelleden there but lytylle while; and that is towards the est, at the begynnyng of the erthe.'

For the subject in general, see Coli, Il Paradiso Terrestre Dantesco, Florence, 1897.

Bezond pir ilez þat I hafe talde ȝow off, and þe desertez of þe lordschepe of Prestre John, to ga even ¹ est, es na land inhabited, as I said before, bot wastez and wildernesses, and grete rochez and moun-taynes, and a myrk ² land, whare na man may see, nyght ne day, as men of þas cuntreez talde us. And þat mirk land and þase desertez 5 laste riȝt to Paradyse terrestre, wharein Adam and Eve ware putte; bot þai ware þare bot a lytill while. And þat place es toward þe este, at þe begynnyng of þe erthe. Bot þat es noȝt oure este, whare þe sonne risez till us; for when þe sonne risez in þase cuntreez, þan es it midnyght in our cuntree, because of þe roundness of þe erthe. For, as I 10 said before, Godd made þe erthe all rounde, in myddez of þe firmament. Bot þe hillez and þe valays þat er now on þe erthe er noȝt bot

 5 of fire evermare brynnand, þe whilk es called þe flawmand swerde¹ þat Godd ordaynd þare before þe entree, for na man schuld entre.

In þe middes of Paradys es a well, out of þe whilke þer commez foure flodez,² þat rynnez thurgh diverse landcz. Þir³ flodez sinkez doun into þe erthe within Paradyse, and rynnez so under þe erthe many a

SIR JOHN'S MODESTY

Text, pp. 155-6

Þare er many oper cuntreez and oper mervayles whilk I hafe noȝt sene, and þerfore I can noȝt speke properly of þam; and also in cuntreez whare I hafe bene er many mervayles of whilk I speke noȝt, for it

RELIGIOUS AND DIDACTIC PIECES

ROLLE, THE FORM OF PERFECT LIVING ,

Richard Rolle, who was born near the end of the thirteenth century (the year is not known) at Thornton Dale, near Pickering in northern Yorkshire, was a hermit and mystic who wrote the first original [since the Ancren Riwele is translated] English prose after the Conquest (Jusserand, Lit. Hist. Eng. People 1. 218). In his early youth he was sent as a student to Oxford, but was repelled by the scholastic philosophy there dominant, and made up his mind to turn to a life of contemplation. For the next four years he lived in a solitary cell on the estate of friends who provided him with the necessaries of life, and there he passed through three stages of the contemplative life — purificatio, illuminatio, and contemplatio proper (cf. H. O. Taylor, The Mediæval Mind 2. 362 ff.), in the last of which he had the mystic sense of the direct vision of God. After traveling about for some time, in the hope of teaching his faith, as to which he met with little encouragement and considerable opposition, he settled near the recluse Margaret Kirkby at Ainderby, near Northallerton (famous for the Battle of the Standard), also in the North Riding, where he gave assistance and instruction to her and other recluses. Later he lived and wrote at Hampole, five miles northwest of Doncaster, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, where he died in 1349, and whence he has come to be known as Richard Rolle of Hampole.

Rolle was a figure apparently but little heeded by the authorities of his own time, yet one of real significance. In his emphasis on the direct relation between the individual soul and God, rather than on mere obedience to the Church, he was a forerunner of Wycliffe and Luther; and through the fervor of his mystical outpourings, he still makes a strong emotional appeal.

His works, which it is hard in some cases to distinguish from those of his imitators and translators, were sometimes written in Latin and sometimes in English, one of the best known of those in English being a long poem, The Prick of Conscience. His editor Horstman says of him: 'His chief characteristic as a writer is originality — he is essentially a genius; everywhere he cuts out new ways, lays new foundations. Next, he is preëminently a lyric; whether he writes in prose or verse, he writes from feeling, from momentary inspiration. Besides, he is of a remarkable versatility and facility; he writes with equal ease in Latin and English, in verse and prose, and in all kinds of verse, frequently mixing prose and verse in the same work; he writes postils, commentaries, epistles, satires, polemic treatises, prayers and devotions, lyric and didactic poetry, epigrams' (2. xxxv). Our selections are from his epistle known as The Form of Perfect Living, as it appears in MS. Cambr. Dd. V. 64, where it is dedicated to the recluse Margaret. For this text, and for an extended account of Richard Rolle and his place in the history of mysticism, see Richard Rolle of Hampole, ed. C. Horstman, London, 1895, in Yorkshire Writers (Library of Early English Writers). Our selections are from Vol. 1, pp. 29-30, 46-9.

Þe hegher party of contemplacion es behaldyng and zernyng of¹⁴ þe thynges of heven, and joy in þe Haly Gaste. Þat men hase oft, and¹⁵ if it be swa þat þai be noght prayand with þe mowth, bot anely thynkand of God, and of þe fairehede¹⁶ of aungels

THE ANCREN RIWLE

The Ancren Riwe (Regulæ Inclusarum) was written for the guidance of three sisters of gentle blood who had given themselves up to a religious life, without having at that time become nuns. It exists in three languages—French, English, and Latin—the English having been translated from French, and the Latin from English (G. C. Macaulay, in Mod. Lang. Rev. 9. 63 ff.).

The author has been thus characterized: 'His doctrine may be summed up in a word: he teaches self-renunciation. But he does it in so kindly and affectionate a tone that the life he wishes his penitents to submit to does not seem too bitter; his voice is so sweet that the existence he describes seems almost sweet' (Jusserand, Lit. Hist. Eng. People 1. 212). His 'work betokens much learning, great knowledge of the human heart, as well as deep piety, and a refined and gentle spirit' (Ten Brink, Early Eng. Lit. 1. 200). Ten Brink also refers (ibid. 2¹. 16) to 'that aroma, that tinge of poetry, which breathes throughout the language of the Ancren Riwele,' to which, as well as to the author's deep spirituality, the work owes its unusual appeal.

Judging from its language, the Ancren Riwele was written in the early thirteenth century. The best text is contained in a Cambridge manuscript designated by Macaulay as B (Mod. Lang. Rev. 9. 145). Our selections are taken from Morton's text (The Ancren Riwele, London, 1853), in which MS. Brit. Mus. Cotton Nero A. XIV is reproduced; the pages are 50-2, 72, 132-4, 388-90, 416-22, 422-4. The dialect is southwestern. Morton's translation is published in The King's Classics as The Nun's Rule.

A TREATISE AGAINST MIRACLE-PLAYS

This tract, in the form of a sermon, was first printed by Halliwell (in Reliquiae Antiquae 2. 42 ff.) from a manuscript volume of sermons in the library of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, London. This is now British Museum MS. Add. 24,202 which is designated in the catalogue as 'Wycliffite Tracts in English.' The manuscript is described as a small folio, vellum, of the end of the fourteenth century. Unless otherwise stated, the readings given below repose upon my collation of this manuscript. As there is considerable variation in the orthography, I have sought to render it more consistent, especially in the endings. Emendations marked 'M' are those of Mätzner in his Altenglische Sprachproben; the others are mine.

The following selections give the main argument of the tract, which is headed: 'Here bigynnys a tretise of miraclis-pleyinge.' The outline which follows may help to make the argument clear. Detailed notes can be found in Mätzner's edition.

- I. Introduction. Christ's miracles were performed in earnest, and therefore ought not to be represented in play.
 1. Such representation takes away our fear of God, and, as a result, the strength of our faith.
 2. It contradicts the teaching of Christ.
 3. It leads to scorn of God: the players make sport of his passion.
- II. There are six arguments in favor of miracle-plays. Men say:
 1. They are given for the sake of worship.
 2. By them many are converted to a good life, seeing, as they do, the manifest work of the devil.
 3. Often the sight of Christ's passion moves men to tears.
 4. Some men may be drawn to religion through play, who would never be moved by seriousness.
 5. Men must have some recreation; why not that of a good sort?
 6. We do not object to paintings of miracles; why, then, to dramatic portrayals of them?
- III. But there are answers to all these arguments:
 1. The giving of such plays springs from heathenism, and is not worship. Worship consists in doing the will of God.

¹ you are in low spirits

² guard yourselves

³ your

⁴ more vigorously

⁵ folly

⁶ lose

2. Though good may sometimes come of evil, this is not the rule. Miracle-plays most often pervert those who see them.
3. If the spectators weep, it is purely from external causes, not from consciousness of their own sin.
4. If men are ever converted by miracle-plays, it is only to show the grace of God. But men are seldom converted by such means; conversion comes from the earnest working of God, not from playing.
5. Plays do not afford true recreation.
6. Good paintings merely exhibit truth, but plays are mainly to delight men's bodily senses.

IV. A friend declares :

1. That he will not abandon his interest in miracle-plays unless their sinfulness can be proved directly from Holy Writ.

Answer : Such plays are against the spirit of the commandment, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.' (Illustration : One would not represent in a play the death of one's own father.)

2. That if the giving of such plays is sin, it is but a small sin.

Answer : Any sin, however small, is deadly sin.

Moreover, the danger in such playing is shown by the analogy of the following stories, with their mediæval allegorical interpretations :

- a. Ishmael and Isaac (Gen. 21. 8-10).
- b. The children of Abner and those of Joab (2 Sam. 2. 12-32).
- c. Moses and the children of Israel (Exod. 32).
- d. Elisha (2 Kings 2. 23-4).
- e. Noah (as referred to in Matt. 24. 38-9).

- V. If we are to play, let us do so in the spirit of David (2 Sam. 6. 15-6, 20-2), (1) realizing how God's grace to us surpasses that to our neighbors; (2) being always devout before God, though disliked by the world; (3) being lowly in our own eyes.

Knowe zee, Cristen men, þat as Crist, God and man, is boþe weye, trewþ, and lif,¹ as seiþ þe gospel of Jon (weye to þe erryng, trewþe to þe unknowyng and doutyng, lif to þe styynge² to hevene and weryinge³), so Crist dyde⁴ noþinge to us but ef[f]ectuely in weye of mercy, in treuþe of ri[ʒ]twesnes, and in lif of gildyng⁵ everlastyng 5 joye for oure continuely⁶ mo[u]rnyng and sorwyng in þis valey of teeres.⁷ Þe⁸ myraclis, þerfore, þat Crist dyde⁴ heere in erþe, ouþer in⁹ hymself ouþer in hise seyntis, weren so ef[f]ectuel and in earnest don,¹⁰ þat to synful men þat erren þei brouȝten forȝyvenesse of synne, settinge hem in þe weye of riȝt bileve; to doutouse¹¹ men not stede- 10 fast þei brouȝten in kunnyng¹² to betere plesen God, and verry hope it is tyme and skilful¹ to assayen to converten² þe puple by pley

[5] summe recreac[i]oun men moten³ han; and bettere it is, or lesse yvele, þat þei han þeyre recreac[i]oun⁴ by pleyinge of myraclis þan 5 by pleyinge of oþer[e] japis. Also, [6] siþen it is leueful⁵ to han þe myraclis of God peyntid, why is [it] not as wel leueful to han þe myraclis of God pleyid,⁶ syþen men mowen bettere reden þe wille

10 rehersid, by þe pleyinge of hem þan by þe peyntynge, for þis is a deed bok, þe toþer a qu[i]ck⁷?

To þe first reson we answeren,⁸ seying [1] þat siche myraclispleyinge is not to þe worschipe of God, for þei ben don more to ben seen of þe worlde, and to plesen⁹ to þe world, þanne to ben seen of 15 God, or to plesen⁹ to hym. As Crist never ensaumplide hem,¹⁰ but onely heþene men, þat everemore dishonouren God, seyinge þat to þe worschipe of God þat is to þe most veleynye¹¹ of hym; þerfore, as þe wickidnesse of þe misbileve of heþene men lyiþ to hemsilf¹² whanne þei seyn þat þe wors[c]hipyng of þeire maumetrie¹³ is to þe worschipe

[2] Þe same wise,¹⁸ myraclis-pleyinge, albeit þat it be synne, is oþerewhile¹⁹ occasion of convertyng of men; but as it is synne, it is 25 fer more occasion of pervertyng of men, not onely of oon synguler²⁰

And by þis we answeren to þe furþe resoun, seyinge [4] þat no man may be convertid to God but onely by þe earnestful doinge³ of 5 God, and by noon veyn pleying[e]; for þat þat⁴ þe word of God worchip not, ne his sacramentis, how shulde pleyinge worchen, þat is of no vertue, but ful of defaute? . . . Þe wepyng þat men wepen ofte in siche pley, comunely is fals, witnessinge⁵ þat þei loven⁶ more þe lykyng⁷ of þeire body, and of prosperite of þe world, þan lykyng

MIRK, INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARISH PRIESTS

The Instructions for Parish Priests is a versified translation of the Pupilla Oculi of William de Pagula (Dict. Nat. Biog. s.v. Mirk). Its author, who was prior of Lilleshall in Shropshire, wrote also, besides a Latin Manuale Sacerdotum, the Liber Festialis, an English book of sermons which was decidedly popular, being printed eighteen times between 1483 and 1532 (Schofield, English Literature from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer, p. 395). Nothing more is known of Mirk's life; the date 1403 as the time at which he flourished is conjectural.

The following selections are from Peacock's print (E.E.T.S. 31, London, 1868; revised, 1902) of MS. Brit. Mus. Cotton Claud. A. 2, which he supposes to be not later than 1450, and to represent the language of an earlier time. The pages are respectively, with the exception of the third from the end, 2, 9-10, 14, 32, 43, 66-7, and 60, of the edition of 1902; the antepenultimate, 21-3 of the edition of 1868.

THE RULE OF ST. BENEDICT

' Perhaps it is hardly too much to say that no literary production since the time of the apostles has contributed so much to Western civilization as the Benedictine Rule; and yet its author probably never regarded it as a literary production at all' (Cook and Tinker, Sel. Trans. from Old Eng. Prose, p. 278).

Benedict was born at the end of the fifth century; by the end of the sixth his Rule was chosen by Pope Gregory the Great for a monastery Gregory had founded at Rome. By the end of the eighth century — the age of Charlemagne

—the Rule was almost universally followed in European monasteries. Throughout the Middle Ages the Benedictine monks were famous for their learning, and, by their zeal in copying classical manuscripts, preserved most of those that have come down to us. For a general account of them, see Montalembert's Monks of the West, Book 4.

The early English manuscripts of the Rule are many of them based on a version written for nuns. That from which our selections are taken is MS. Brit. Mus. Cotton Vespasian A. 25, in the Northern dialect of the earlier fifteenth century, as printed by Kock (E.E.T.S. 120), the respective pages being 95-6, 99-100, 102-5, 115-6.

ROBERT MANNYNG OF BRUNNE, HANDLING SIN

Robert Mannyng of Brunne (now Bourne), in Lincolnshire, wrote his poem, the Handlyng Synne, in 1303, when he had for fifteen years belonged to the priory of Gilbertine canons at Sempringham (six miles from Bourne). The work is a poetical adaptation of the Manuel des Pechiez of William of Wadington, who wrote some time in the reign of Edward I (1272–1307). While characterizing the seven deadly sins, etc., it pictures in a lively way the life and vices of the age, and inserts tales here and there to point a moral. The poem has been spoken of as 'the work which more than any former one foreshadowed the path that English literature was to tread from that time forward' (Dict. Nat. Biog. s.v. Mannyng); and, in general, it has been more popular than the writer's other chief work, a chronicle-history of England. Of Mannyng's language Ten Brink says (Early English Literature 1. 302): 'Robert of Brunne is without doubt one of the writers who served most to spread the East-Midland dialect toward the south. And through him many new Romanic words were probably either introduced into the English literary language, or at least established there.'

With the caution in 303 10 ff. may be compared the following (reprint of E.E.T.S. 15. 59):

A man that intendyth to mynstrels shall soone be weddyd to poverte. . . .
Iff mynstrels plice the, feyne as thow herde them, but thynke uppone another.
He that lawith [laughs] at a mynstrels worde gevith to hym a wedde [forfeit, pledge].

Our selections are from E.E.T.S. 119 and 123, which print the version of this poem (12,630 lines long) in MS. Brit. Mus. Harl. 1701; and, in parallel columns, the corresponding parts of Wadington's Old French. The selections are, respectively, lines 985-1054, 4571-4614, 4739-4774, 8987-9006, 10,729-10,798.

THE BOOK OF THE KNIGHT OF LA TOUR-LANDRY

Among the numerous instruction-books of the Middle Ages was one known as Le Livre du Chevalier de la Tour-Landry pour l'Enseignement de ses Filles, a series of tales written (collected, rather) in 1371–1372 for his motherless daughters by Geoffroy de la Tour-Landry, a nobleman of Anjou. A similar book written for his sons has disappeared entirely, but this for the daughters was frequently copied — about a dozen manuscript copies being still in existence. A German translation of the work was printed toward the end of the fifteenth century, and an English translation by Caxton in 1484.

Our selections are taken from the Early English Text Society's print (No. 33, ed. Wright, 1868; revised ed., 1906) of MS. Brit. Mus. Harl. 1764, assigned to the reign of Henry VI (1422–1461). This translation, by an unknown hand, is much less literal than Caxton's (cf. Wright's introduction). The selections are from pages 1–4, 22, 26–8, and 39–40 of the edition of 1906. The words in brackets are supplied from Caxton's edition.

were full of mirthe and joye; and thaire suete songe made my herte to lighten, and made me to thinke of the tyme that is passed of my youthe, how love in gret distresse had holde me, and how Y was in her service mani tyme full of sorugh and gladnesse, as mani lovers
 5 ben. But my sorw was heled, and my service wel ysette¹ and quitte, for he gave [me a fayr] wyff, and . . .² that was bothe faire and good, [whiche had knowleche of alle honoure, alle good, and fayre mayntenynge,³] and of all good she was bell⁴ and the floure; and Y delited me so moche in her that Y made for her love-songges, balades,
 10 rondelles, viralles,⁵ and diverse nwe thinges in the best wise that Y couthe. . . . And as Y was in the saide gardein, thinkynge of these thoughtz, Y sawe come towards me my iii doughters, of the whiche I was joyfull, and had grete desire that thei shuld turne to good and worshipe above all ertheli thinges, for thei were yonge, and had but
 15 tendir witte; and so atte the begynnyng a man aught to lerne⁶ his doughters with good ensaumples yevinge, as dede the Quene Proues of Hongrie, that faire and goodly chastised⁷ and taught her doughters, as it [is] contened in her boke. . . . And Y said to hem that Y wolde make a boke of ensaumples, for to teche my doughtres, that thei
 20 might understond how thei shulde governe hem, and knowe good from evell. And so Y made hem extraie⁸ me ensaumples of the Bible and other bokes that Y had, as the gestis⁹ of kingges, the croniclez of Fraunce, Grece, of Inglond, and of mani other straunge londes. And Y made hem rede me everi boke; and ther that Y fonde a good
 25 ensauple, Y made extraie it oute. And thanne Y made this boke. But Y wolde not sette it in ryme, but in prose, for to abregge¹⁰ it, and that it might be beter and more plainly to be understond. And Y made this boke for the gret love that Y had to my said doughtres, the whiche Y loved as fader aught to love his child, having hertely

And therfor Y have made ii bokes, one for my sones, another for my doughtres, for to lerne hem to rede. And in reding, it may not be but that thei shall kepe with hem som good ensauple for to flee evell, and withholde the good. 5 For it shall not be posible but sumtyme thei shall have mynde on sum good ensauple, sum good doctrine of this boke, whanne thei knowe or here speke hereafter, as thei fall in the rewe¹ upon sum spekers of suche matiers.

THE STORY OF THE MAGPIE

Ther was a woman that had a pie² in a cage, that spake and wolde 10 tell talys that she saw do. And so it happed that her husbonde made kepe³ a gret ele in a litell ponde in his gardin, to that entent to yeve it sum of his frendes that wolde come to see hym; but the wyff, whanne her husbond was oute, saide to her maide: 'Late us ete the gret ele, and Y will saie to my husbond that the otour⁴ hathe eten 15 hym;' and so it was done. And whan the good man was come, the pye began to tell hym how her maistresse had eten the ele. And he yode⁵ to the ponde, and fonde not the ele. And he asked his wiff wher the ele was become.⁶ And she wende to have excused her, but he saide her: 'Excuse you not, for Y wote well ye have eten yt, for 20 the pye hathe told me.' And so ther was gret noyse⁷ betwene the man and hys wiff for etinge of the ele. But whanne the good man was gone, the maistresse and the maide come to the pie, and plucked of all the fedres on the pyes hede, saieng: 'Thou hast discovered⁸ us of the ele'; and thus was the pore pye plucked. But ever after, 25 whanne the pie sawe a balled or a pilled⁹ man, or a woman with an high forhede, the pie saide to hem: 'Ye spake of the ele.' And therfor here is an ensauple that no woman shulde ete no lycorous¹⁰ morcelles in the absens and withoute weteng¹¹ of her husbond, but yef it so were that it be with folk of worshippe, to make hem chere¹²; 30 for this woman was afterward mocked for the pye and the ele.

THE STORY OF THE OBEDIENT WIFE

Hit happed onis there were iii marchauntes that yede¹ homwarde from a faiere, and as thei fell in talkinge, ridyng on the waye, one of hem saide: 'It is a noble thinge a man to have a good wiff that obeiethe and dothe his biddinge atte all tymes.' 'Be my trouthe,' 5 saide that other, 'my wiff obeiethe me truly.' 'Be God,' saide that other, 'Y trowe myn obeieth best to her husbonde.' Thanne he that beganne furst to speke saide: 'Lete² leye a wager of a dener,³ and whos wiff that obeiethe worst, lete her husbonde paie for the dener'; and thus the wager was leyde. And thei ordeined amonges hem how 10 thei shulde saie⁴ her wyfes, for thei ordeined that everi man shulde bidde his wyff lepe into a basin that thei shulde sette afore her, and they were suoren that none shulde late his wiff have weting⁵ of her wager, save only thei shulde saye: 'Lokithe,⁶ wiff, that Y comaunde be done.' However it be, after one of hem bade his wiff lepe into the 15 basin that he had sette afore her on the grounde, and she ansuered and axed wherto,⁷ and he saide: 'For it is myn luste,⁸ and Y will ye do it.' 'Be God,' quod she, 'Y will furst wete⁹ wherto ye will have me lepe into the basin.' And for nothings her husbond coude do she wolde not do it. So her husbonde up with his fust,¹⁰ and gave her ii 20 or iii gret strokes; and thanne yede thei to the secounde marchauntys hous, and he comaunded that whatever he bade do it shulde be do, but it was not longe after but he bade his wiff lepe into the basin that was afore her on the flore, and she asked wherto, and she saide she wolde not for hym. And thanne he toke a staffe, and al tobete¹¹ her.
 25 And thanne thei yode to the thridde marchauntes hous, and there thei fonde the mete on the borde, and he rowned¹² in one of his felawes

'What,' saide the good man, 'thanne canne⁴ ye none other plaie, wiff?' 'Be ye wode,⁵ sir,' she saide, 'Y have do youre biddinge, as ye bade me to my power, notwithstandinge it is 10 youre harme and myn; but Y had lever ye had harme and Y bothe, thanne Y disobeied youre biddinge; for ye saide: "Seyle sus table." 'Nay,' quod he, 'Y saide: "Sele sus table," that is to saie, "Salt on the borde." 'Bi my trouthe,' she saide, 'Y understode that ye bade me lepe on the borde,' and there was moche mirthe and laughinge. And 15 the other two marchauntes saide it was no nede to bidde her lepe into the basin, for she obeied ynough; wherthorugh⁶ thei consented that her husbond had wonne the wager, and thei had lost bothe. And after⁷ she was gretly preised for her obeisaunce to her husbonde, and she was not bete as were that other ii wyves that wolde not do her 20 husbondes comaundement.

HOW ST. BERNARD'S SISTER WAS LED AWAY FROM VANITIES

Hit befell that Seint Bernarde, that was an holy man and of gret richesse and birth, lefte all his possessiones and good, and yede to serve God in an abbey; and for his holy lyving, and weringe⁸ of the heyre, and doinge gret abstinence and almesdedes, made⁹ that 25 he was chose to be abbot of that place. GESTA ROMANORUM: THE MAGIC IMAGE

The Gesta Romanorum is a series of mediæval tales and their morals, originally written in Latin, and widely used for further artistic development or for illustrative material by the writers and preachers of the later Middle Ages. In the collection are versions of the tale of Constance which Chaucer tells in his Man of Law's Tale, of Shakespeare's bond- and casket-incidents in The Merchant of Venice, and of the Lear story; and many less-known tales appear in later poems and ballads. The date, authorship, and origin of the series are doubtful; for discussions of them see the Latin version, ed. Oesterley, 1872, revised 1877, and the Early English Text Society's reprint of the Middle English versions (ed. Herrtage, 1879; Ex. Ser. 33). Cf. also Swan's translation of the Latin Gesta Romanorum in the Bohn Library.

The following selection is from Herrtage's reprint of MS. Brit. Mus. Harl. 7333, and is No. 3 of the series of tales (pp. 7-8). The Middle English versions (3 manuscripts) are all dated in the reign of Henry VI (1422-1461).

Our story has been versified by William Morris as The Writing on the Image, in The Earthly Paradise.

THE BESTIARY

The Bestiary, or Physiologus, had a history of something like a thousand years before it entered Middle English, which it did as a translation from the Latin of a certain Theobaldus; his work had been already rendered into French by Philippe de Thaon, who dedicated his version to Adela, second wife (1121) of Henry I of England. The Middle English version belongs to ca. 1220.

The two subjects dealt with below — the Whale (Turtle) and the Panther — are also treated in Old English poetry (see my forthcoming edition, in the Belles Lettres Series, of the Phoenix, Elene, and the Physiologus, where a much fuller account is given, with references to the bibliography of the subject).

Our text is derived from Mätzner, Altenglische Sprachproben (1. 55–75), which in turn reproduces Wright and Halliwell, Reliquiæ Antiquæ 1. 208–27. Emendations are by Mätzner, and (of the Whale) by Emerson (Middle English Reader); others are mine.

THE OWL AND THE NIGHTINGALE

The Owl and the Nightingale is the earliest specimen in English of the true contention-poem — a verbal contest for supremacy — analogous to the Latin, French, and Provençal partimen, tenson, plait, jeu-parti, etc. Its main subject, after the opening personalities, is joy and æstheticism, represented by the nightingale, as opposed to practicality and seriousness, represented by the owl. In Fritz Reuter's Hanne Nüte (Part 9), the sparrow and the nightingale contrast their modes of life :

'Gu'n Abend, Jochen,' seggt sei, 'na?
Ik bün taurügg ut Afrika.' —
'Ja,' segg ik, 'süllst di brav wat schämen,
So in de Welt herüm tau striken,
Bliw hir bi uns, bi dinesglikén !
An Lotten kannst en Bispill nemen,
De brött nu all den tweiten Satz.' —
Dunn lacht s' un seggt : 'Mein lieber Spatz,
Dein Lotting ist ein braves Weib,
Un Essen kochen, Strümpfe knünnen,
Un Junge aus die Eier sitten
Ist sicher auch ein Zeitvertreib ;
Doch wir, die in der Poesie
Die Aufgab' unsres Lebens finnen,
Wir Künstler und wir Sängerrinnen,
Wir knünnen, Jochen, un brüten nie.'

'In a group of poets that were active in the South of England at the beginning of the thirteenth century, the author of The Owl and the Nightingale stands preëminent. Of striking vigor and originality of mind, possessing a sane critical judgment founded on a considerable culture, and endowed with astonishing poetical gifts for his time and environment, he produced a composition that seems the earliest, and from many points of view the best, original long poem of a wholly imaginative character written in English before the time of Chaucer' (Wells' ed., p. xxxvii). Elsewhere Wells says : 'Theme and treatment grew out of the poet's own immediate experience. . . . The poem is notable in its period for its embodiment of the distinctly national tone and spirit that were beginning to grow out of the amalgamation of the French and the English, the learned and the popular, in the island.' This author's identity is unknown ; it would seem probable that he is not the Nicholas of Guildford chosen by the disputants as judge.

The poem is found in two manuscripts. Our selection (made with the kind permission of the publishers, Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co.) is from John Edwin Wells' reproduction of MS. Brit. Mus. Cotton Caligula A. 9, which belongs to the first half of the thirteenth century, with his emendations, and a few of my own. The selection includes lines 1-94, 101-285, 287-348.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN

Until 1906, the work called The Vision (rather, Book) of William concerning Piers the Plowman had been for a generation attributed, on the faith of two fifteenth-century memoranda, to William Langland, or Langley, whom Skeat believed to have been born about 1332, and to have died about 1400. Three texts of the poem have been printed, of which the second and third (known as B and C) are revisions and extensions of the first (A). The dates assigned to these are: A, 1362; B, 1377; C, after 1390 (probably about 1398). The A-text has 2567 lines, the B-text 7242, and the C-text 7357. All have been edited by Skeat in two volumes (Oxford, 1886).

Professor John M. Manly presents his view, which differs in many respects from that hitherto received, in the Cambridge History of English Literature, Vol. 2. According to him, the twelve cantos, or passus, contained in A, were the work of two different authors, of whom the second wrote Passus 9-12, while B and C represent two revisions, so that there would have been four authors; but since he finds 61 lines at the end of the A-text (12. 57-105, and 12 lines not given in Skeat's large edition, 1. 331) to have been written by a certain John But (or Butt), the whole number of authors would be five.

On the theory of the single authorship. Jusserand has an illuminating chapter in Vol. 1 of his Literary History of the English People. For a general bibliography, see Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 2. 490-7.

The passages given below are all from the B-text. They differ so considerably from the A-text that Manly's characterization of the style of the latter sufficiently holds concerning them (op. cit. p. 13): 'As to the style, no summary or paraphrase can reproduce its picturesqueness and verve. It is always simple, direct, evocative of a constant series of clear and sharply-defined images of individuals and groups. Little or no attempt is made at elaborate, or even ordinarily full, description, and color-words are singularly few; but it would be difficult to find a piece of writing from which the reader derives a clearer vision of individuals or groups of moving figures in their habit as they lived. That the author was endowed in the highest degree with the faculty of visualization is proved, not merely by his ability to stimulate the reader to form mental images, but even more by the fact that all the movements of individuals and groups can be followed with ease and certainty. Composition, in the larger sense of structural excellence, that quality common in French literature,

but all too rare in English, and supposed to be notably lacking in Piers the Plowman, is one of the most striking features.'

Our text is from Skeat's smaller edition, based on MS. Laud 581, with certain omitted lines supplied from the large edition; with the omission of the dots which mark the middle of lines; and with changes in punctuation, capitalization, and the joining of words. The lines quoted are Prol. 1-122; 3. 1-129, 133-68; 5. 304-46, 352-9, 364-71; 5. 392-478; 6. 107-53.

PROLOGUE

In a somer seson, whan soft was the sonne,
 I shope¹ me in shroudes,² as I a shepe³ were;
 In habite as an heremite, unholy of workes,
 Went wyde in þis world, wondres to here.
 Ac on a May mornynge, on Malverne hilles,⁴ 5
 Me byfel a ferly⁵ — of fairy, me thouȝte;
 I was wery, forwandred,⁶ and went me to reste
 Under a brode banke, bi a bornes⁷ side;
 And as I lay and lened, and loked in þe wateres,
 I slombred in a slepyng — it sweyved⁸ so merye. 10
 Thanne gan I to meten⁹ a merveilouse swevene,
 That I was in a wilderness — wist I never where;
 As I bihelde into þe est, an hiegh¹⁰ to þe sonne,
 I seigh a toure on a toft,¹¹ trielich¹² ymaked;
 A depe dale binethe, a dongeon þereinne, 15
 With depe dyches and derke, and dredful of sight.
 A faire felde ful of folke fonde I there bytwene,
 Of alle maner of men — þe mene and þe riche —
 Worchyng and wandryng, as þe worlde asketh.¹³
 Some putten hem¹⁴ to þe plow, pleyed ful selde¹⁵; 20

PIERS THE PLOWMAN'S CREED

Among the poems which owe their origin to Piers Plowman is Piers Plowman's Creed, written by an unknown author soon after 1393. It runs through the mouth of an unlearned man who has got by heart the Paternoster and Ave Maria. He wishes also to know the Creed, and seeks a teacher. He applies in turn to the friars of each of the four orders. Each rails at the other orders, and promises that the questioner shall be saved without knowledge of the Creed, if he will contribute to the expenses of the monastery. The man leaves them in indignation at their magnificent buildings and luxurious lives, and finally comes upon a poor plowman, who joins him in invective against friars and all orders. Skeat suggests that the keynote of the poem is to be found at the beginning of Passus 9 (A), 8 (B), 11 (C) of Piers Plowman.

This poem was first printed in 1553. Our text, however, is taken, not from that of 1553, but from Skeat's edition (E.E.T.S. 30) of MS. Camb. Trin. C. R. 3. 15 (adopting Skeat's emendations without comment), which, though printed later than 1553, he concludes to be based on a much earlier manuscript. Our selections embrace lines 98–137, 153–242, 420–42, 546–64, 719–61, and 77

SONG AGAINST THE FRIARS

The following selection (lines 1–84 of the poem) is reprinted from Wright's Political Poems and Songs (London, 1859) 1. 263–5. It is from MS. Brit. Mus. Cotton Cleopatra B. 2, which Wright assigns to the year 1382.

ON THE MINORITE FRIARS

This poem, found in the same manuscript as the preceding one, is also reprinted from Wright's Political Poems and Songs (I. 268-70). The writer seems to be describing pictorial representations.

THE REPLY OF FRIAR DAW TOPIAS

About 1401. This selection, from MS. Oxford Digby 41, is here reprinted from Wright's Political Poems and Songs 2. 76-8.

Forthermore¹ thou spekest
 Of oure costli houses ;
 Thou seist it were more almes
 To helpen the nedy

 3it makist thou to thi sheep a shepen,³
 And to thi hors a stable ;
 And many a pore man ther is
 That hath noon hillyng,⁴
 15 But oonly heven is his hous.
 The bestes stond kevered ;
 Whi houses thou not pore men
 As wele as thi beestis ?

THE LAND OF COKAYGNE

The Land of Cokaygne, which has been called the earliest extant English fabliau, is not a fabliau at all, but rather a piece of Rabelaisian satire. With the satire, which is directed against monks and nuns, and possibly includes some local and specific references, are, however, mingled touches of the purely comic spirit.

An Old French poem similar in character is found in Barbazan and Méon's Fabliaux et Contes 4. 175–81, entitled Li Fabliaus de Coquaigne (though, again, not a fabliau). Here the details are somewhat different, and the satiric intent, and reference to the religious orders, much less marked, but the general picture is of the same sort. One of the most amusing details is similar:

Par les rues vont rostissant
 Les crasses oes, et tornant
 Tout par eles [lines 37–9].

THE GOSSIPS' FEAST

The following poem is reprinted from Dyboski's Songs, Carols, etc. (E.E.T.S. Ex. Ser. 101), an edition of Richard Hill's Commonplace-Book (MS. Oxford Balliol 354). The manuscript contains records as late as 1536, but our text differs only slightly from that of Wright in Percy Society 23. 91-5, which is dated by the editor 1461-85, and from which two or three readings are here adopted (marked W.). Our text is on pages 106-8 of Dyboski.

STANS PUER AD MENSAM

The following poem, by John Lydgate (1370?-1451?), the follower and imitator of Chaucer, is taken from the print of MS. Harl. 2251 (about 1460) in The Babees Book, ed. Furnivall (E.F.T.S. 32). With its precepts one may compare Chaucer's characterization of the Prioress (Prolog. 127-36):

At mete wel ytaught was she withalle;
 She leet no morsel from hir lippes falle,
 Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
 Wel coude she carie a morsel, and wel kepe,
 That no drope ne fille upon hir brest.
 In curteisye was set ful muche hir lest.
 Hir over lippe wyped she so clene
 That in hir coppe was no ferthing sene
 Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte.
 Ful semely after hir mete she raughte.

Our extract comprises lines 15-42, 57-70. Two or three emendations are from the Lambeth MS.

THE LIBEL OF ENGLISH POLICY

The Libel (or Little Book) of English Policy, a plea for a strong navy, was written, according to internal evidence, after the siege of Calais by the Duke of Burgundy, in 1436, and before the death of the Emperor Sigismund in 1437. The siege of Calais, though unsuccessful, had roused England to a sense of the importance of controlling the straits; and the author of this poem, who is unknown, cleverly shows how all the commerce of Europe (generally directed toward the Low Countries) must needs pass through 'the narrow sea.' Control of the sea, therefore, would make England powerful. He reviews the exports and imports of the chief countries of Europe, showing intimate acquaintance with the commercial life of his age. He may in some respects be compared with Chaucer's merchant, who wolde the see were kept for any thing Bitwixe Middelburgh and Orewelle ;

and his line

Kepe thou the see, that is the walle of Englund, recalls Shakespeare (Rich. II 2. 1. 48–50, 63) :

This precious stone, set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house. . . .
England bound in with the triumphant sea.

His spirit, we are told (Traill, Social England 2. 347 ; cf. 340, 344 ff., 406) 'is exactly the spirit which animated the sea-captains and merchant adventurers of the golden age of Elizabeth.'

Our selections are from Wright's Political Poems and Songs 2. 157–9, 160–1, 172–3, this text being printed from MS. Oxford Bodl. Laud. 704. Other editions are by Hertzberg (1878) and in Hakluyt, Principal Navigations, Glasgow, 1903, 2. 114–47. Emendations in the following pages are from the two other editions noted ; ff has been changed to f.

TRANSLATIONS

CHAUCEUR, THE ROMANCE OF THE ROSE

The Roman de la Rose, one of the most celebrated and influential poems of the Middle Ages, is the work of two poets, Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meun, the former writing about 1237, and the latter about 1277. Of the 22,817 lines in Michel's edition (the most accessible), Guillaume wrote 4669, and Jean the remainder. Gaston Paris has characterized Guillaume's part by its use of the dream as a frame; of allegory (the maiden as a rose); of a garden as the scene of the poem; and of personification. Jean de Meun's part is more formless, and makes much parade of learning.

The translation into Middle English consists of 7698 lines. Until about 1868 Chaucer's authorship of the whole of this version was not doubted, especially as Cupid is represented as saying to Chaucer, in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women (B):

For in pleyn text, withouten nede of glose,
Thou hast translated the Romaunce of the Rose.

At present three divisions are recognized: 1-1705 (A), 1706-5810 (B), 5811-7698 (C), corresponding respectively to 1-1678, 1679-5875, and 11,444-13,299 of the French (Michel's edition). Nearly all scholars agree that A is by Chaucer, and that B is not; Kaluza believes that C is also by Chaucer, but this view has not been generally accepted.

Through Guillaume de Digulleville, or Guileville (d. about 1360), the French Roman may have had an influence on the Pilgrim's Progress (see Hammond, Chaucer, pp. 76-7).

For the French original, see Gaston Paris, Litt. Fr. au Moyen Age, chap. 5; Petit de Julleville, Hist. de la Langue et de la Litt. Fr. 2. 105-61 (Langlois); Hammond, Chaucer, pp. 78-9; where bibliographies may be found. The Roman has been translated into English by F. S. Ellis (Temple Classics, 3 vols.). For a bibliography of the English translation, see Hammond, Chaucer, pp. 450-4.

The subjoined text is based upon the reprint of the unique manuscript (Hunterian Museum, Glasgow, V. 3. 7) by Kaluza, issued by the Chaucer Society in 1891. Omissions in the manuscript have been supplied from Thynne's edition, and a few emendations have been admitted. The extracts below are, respectively, lines 49-89, 110-43, 349-68. To lines 71-89 of the version I subjoin 67-83 of the French (Michel), for the purpose of comparison.

CHAUCER'S TRANSLATION OF BOETHIUS

Boethius (ca. 475-524) was a Roman patrician and consul in the reign of Theodoric. His Consolation of Philosophy, said to have been written during his imprisonment by Theodoric, is preserved in hundreds of manuscripts, and was regarded as the standard handbook of philosophy until the Renaissance. This book, which is partly in verse and partly in prose, was translated into prose by Chaucer, while allusions to it, and versions or paraphrases of many passages, are scattered through his works. See Cook and Tinker, Sel. Trans. from Old Eng. Prose, p. 116, and the works mentioned there.

The passages here printed are from Book 2 (Metre 5, and a bit of Prose 6), and comprise (1) Chaucer's prose; (2) the original Latin; (3) a few lines of the Old English translations, prose and verse, due to King Alfred; (4) a portion of Chaucer's The Former Age (following MS. Camb. Univ. li. 3. 21), which is partly a paraphrase of the same passage. It will be noted that various glosses rendered by Chaucer in the prose version are printed in italics. The Latin lines corresponding to a given part of the first version are indicated in square brackets.

[1-5] Blisful was the first age of men! They helden hem apayed¹ with the metes² that the trewe³ feldes broughten forth. They ne destroyede nor deceivede nat hemself with outrage.⁴ They weren wont lightly to slaken hir hunger at even with acornes of okes. [6-10] They

WYCLIFFITE TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE

✓ The extracts here given are from the second Wycliffite version of the Vulgate (ca. 1388), which is not so awkwardly literal as the earlier (ca. 1380). An interesting study of the Wycliffite Epistle to the Romans, compared with the Latin and another (fragmentary) Middle English rendering, has been published by Dr. Emma C. Tucker (Yale Studies in English, No. 49).

LYRICS

CUCKOO SONG

↓ About 1240 (New Eng. Dict.). From MS. Brit. Mus. Harl. 978, where it is accompanied by the music. The author of this rondel, rota, or round, may perhaps have been John of Fornsete, a monk of the abbey of Reading. The melody is of considerable importance in the history of English music. Sober musical critics have spoken of 'this amazing production,' of its 'ingenuity and beauty,' of 'the airy and pastoral correspondence between the words and the music.' See Grove's Dict. Music, 2d ed., 4. 745-54 (cf. 3. 750-1, 765); Oxford Hist. Music 1. 326-38 (Wooldridge); Trans. Phil. Soc. for 1868, p. 103; E.E.T.S. 7. 419-28. There are facsimiles in Grove (4. 748), Chappell, Pop. Music of the Olden Time, and the facsimiles of the Palæographical Society, Part 8, Pl. 125.

MINOT, EDWARD THE THIRD'S FIRST INVASION OF FRANCE

Laurence Minot (fl. 1333-1352) is a writer of whom virtually nothing is known except that he produced a series of eleven poems, of which this is No. 4. Herford has thus characterized him (Dict. Nat. Biog. 38. 47): 'While Minot has no great literary value, and gives almost no new information, he embodies in a most vivid way the militant England of his day. He has but one subject, the triumph of England and the English king over French and Scots. The class-divisions among Englishmen are for him wholly merged in the unity of England; himself probably of Norman origin, his habitual language is the strongest and homeliest Saxon. His verse is throughout inspired by savage triumph in the national successes. He has no elegiac or tender note.' Cf. Hall's edition, pp. xii-xiii; Ten Brink, Early Eng. Lit., pp. 322-4.

Our poem celebrates the fact that, Edward III and Philip of France having offered each other battle, Edward drew up his troops near La Flamengerie in northern France, on Saturday, Oct. 23, 1339, and waited for Philip to arrive, who, however, retreated from his position, five or six miles away, leaving behind him a thousand horses in a marsh (Hall, p. 54; cf. Dict. Nat. Biog. 17. 55).

The poem here printed is from Joseph Hall's edition (Oxford, 1887).

UBI SUNT QUI ANTE NOS FUERUNT?

About 1275. From MS. Bodl. Digby 86, as printed by Furnivall, Minor Poems of the Vernon MS., Part II (E.E.T.S. 117), pp. 761 ff. (ten stanzas in all); cf. the somewhat different version in Bøddeker, Altengl. Dicht., pp. 229–30, which has suggested two or three emendations.

The keynote is struck by Boethius (Book 2, Metre 7):

Ubi nunc fidelis ossa Fabricii manent,
Quid Brutus aut rigidus Cato?

These lines are expanded in translation by King Alfred: 'Where now are the bones of the famous and wise goldsmith, Weland?' etc. One of the most famous variations on the theme is by Villon (1461), the first of whose stanzas runs:

Dictes moy où, n'en quel pays,
Est Flora, la belle Rommaine;
Archiada, ne Thaïs,
Qui fut sa cousine germaine;
Echo, parlant quant bruyt on maine
Dessus riviére ou sus estan,
Qui beaulté ot trop plus qu'humaine?
— Mais où sont les neiges d'antan!

This is translated by Payne as follows:

Tell me, where, in what land of shade,
Hides fair Flora of Rome? and where
Are Thaïs and Archiapade,
Cousins german in beauty rare?
And Echo, more than mortal fair,
That when one calls by river flow,
Or marish, answers out of the air?
— But what has become of last year's snow?

The last four lines are thus translated in Rossetti's version:

Where is Echo, beheld of no man,
Only heard on river and mere,
She whose beauty was more than human?
— But where are the snows of yester-year?

THOMAS OF HALES, LOVE-SONG

Thomas of Hales was a Franciscan friar, who wrote this 'luve-ron' of 210 lines at the request of a young nun, in the reign of Henry III (probably before 1240, according to Camb. Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 258; soon after 1244, according to Morris, Old Eng. Misc., p. xi; about 1272, N. E. D.). The extract below is from the MS. of Jesus College, Oxford (lines 65–120), as reproduced in Old English Miscellany (E.E.T.S. 49), pp. 93–9. A translation of thirteen stanzas, including the first five printed here, may be found in Ten Brink, Early Eng. Lit., pp. 208–11. He says: 'We have here an art-poetry not quite developed in form, of the simplest, noblest mould, a contemplative lyric, which, springing from warm feeling, moves calmly and quietly, without subtlety of reflection or trifling with forms, in euphonious, richly figurative speech.' Another version is in Miss Weston's Chief Middle English Poets, pp. 343–5.

EARTH UPON EARTH

Of this poem there are three versions (A, B, C). A is represented by two poems, B by twenty, and C by one — not to mention a rather anomalous example, difficult to classify. The earliest texts date from about 1310; that printed here is from 1430–1450 (MS. Lambeth 853), and is No. 10 of B. All the known texts have been printed by Miss Hilda Murray, with the necessary apparatus, in Erthe upon Erthe (E.E.T.S. 141). The Stratford-on-Avon version was printed by Longfellow in Outre-Mer.

The theme is: 'Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return' (Gen. 3. 19).

Erþe out of erþe is wondirly wrougt,
 Erþe of erþe haþ gete¹⁰ a dignyte of nougt,

THE PEARL

The Pearl is an elegiac poem with allegorical elements, embodying a vision by the author of a maiden closely related to him, who had died at an early age. Disregarding stanza 72 (for which see Osgood's edition, p. xlvi, note 1), the poem falls into 20 sections, each consisting of 5 twelve-line stanzas, concatenated by the recurrence of the last word of a stanza in the first line following. The rhyme-scheme is ababababbcbc. The date is about 1370; the author wrote also Gawain and the Green Knight (see above, p. 53), besides two other poems, Purity and Patience. There is only a single manuscript, Brit. Mus. Cott. Nero A. X + 4 (facsimile in Yale University Library). The best edition is by Osgood (Belles Lettres Series, 1906); to this the student is referred for further information. There are translations by Gollancz (1891), Mitchell (1906), Coulton (1906), Osgood (1907), Jewett (1908), and Weston (in Romance, Vision, and Satire, 1912); of these the best is Osgood's, in prose.

Tennyson thus apostrophized the poem in Gollancz's edition:

We lost you — for how long a time! —
True pearl of our poetic prime;
We found you, and you gleam reset
In Britain's lyric coronet.

With reference to the emphasis upon the jeweler's art, we know that from the death of St. Louis (1270) this had surpassed all other industrial arts in France (Labarte, Inventaire du Mobilier de Charles V, p. 1).

Our text is taken from Osgood's edition (by the kind permission of the publishers, Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co.), with the substitution, when etymologically indicated, of z for the character ȝ, which usually denotes palatal g, of and for &, and with the normalization of u and v; the emendations are those of Osgood's text. Our extracts comprise lines 37-300, 385-420.

GODRIC'S HYMNS

It is not for beauty of phrasing or loveliness of movement that these verses are remarkable. They are here printed because they are early (Godric died in 1170); because their author was illiterate; and because he had such a singular career. He was successively peddler, pirate, and palmer, before, at the age of forty or over, he turned to the hermit's life. He is described as broad-shouldered, with well-set, sinewy frame, and flowing beard; and his hair in earlier life was black. Of him, as of Chaucer's shipman, it might be said:

With many a tempest hadde his berd been shake.

During his wandering life, he was for several years the master of a vessel plying between England, Scotland, Denmark, and Flanders; journeyed twice to Jerusalem, and on May 29, 1102, carried Baldwin I, King of Jerusalem, to Jaffa in his ship; and visited Rome, St. Giles in Provence, and Compostella. last sixty years of his life he spent at Finchale, near Durham. He knew a little French, and could read at least the Psalter in Latin. He 'had unique influence over animals. His heifer, the hare that was nibbling at his garden herbs, the frozen birds, the stag pursued by huntsmen, all found a friend in him' (Dict. Nat. Biog.). In extreme old age he became clairvoyant, and 'would interrupt his conversation to utter prayers for the storm-tossed vessels of his dreams.' See Kingsley, Hermits; Alban Butler's and Baring-Gould's Lives of the Saints; and especially the Dict. Nat. Biog.

The music of all three hymns, found in MS. Brit. Mus. Royal S. F. 7, is reproduced as the frontispiece of Saintsbury's History of English Prosody, with a somewhat imperfect text.

HYMN TO THE VIRGIN

This hymn was taught, as he believed, to Godric, by the Virgin Mary herself. The text is from Zupitza's edition (Eng. Stud. 11. 423). The music to which it was sung is printed in Stevenson's edition of Reginald's life of the saint (Surtees Soc., Vol. 20), p. 288.

HYMN OF BURGWINE, GODRIC'S SISTER

Godric's sister had led a hermit's life in a cell near him at Finchale. After her death he was concerned about the state of her soul. One night he had a vision of the Virgin Mary followed by two men in white garments, and between them the spirit of his sister. They floated down upon the altar of his oratory, and his sister, standing upon the altar, sang the following lines (Zupitza, p. 429).

¹ receive
² protect
³ thy
⁴ gloriously

⁵ kingdom
⁶ bower; chamber (alluding to Ps. 19. 5, understood of Christ as the bridegroom)
⁷ purity

⁸ flower
⁹ blot out
¹⁰ reign
¹¹ bliss

The 'scamel,' or footstool, here refers to the altar, with allusion to 1 Chron. 28. 3; Ps. 99. 5; 132. 7; Isa. 60. 13; for the footstool may be identified with the mercy-seat of the old dispensation (Exod. 25. 16-22), and hence with the altar in the Christian church.

Crist and Seinte Marie swa¹ on scamel me iledde²
 þat Ic on þis erðe ne silde³ wið mine bare fote itredie.⁴

HYMN TO ST. NICHOLAS

St. Nicholas is reported by his biographer, Reginald (ed. Stevenson, p. 202), to have once visited Godric in a dream at Eastertide, in company with angels descending to Christ's sepulchre, to have sung with them, and to have urged Godric to sing also, which he did. Our hymn, however, has no direct allusion to this occurrence.

The third line should, according to Zupitza (p. 430) be brought into direct relation with the end of the first ('God's darling at thy birth, at thy bier') — which indicates that Godric's literary technique left something to be desired.

CHAUCER, INVOCATION TO VENUS

Troilus and Criseyde 3. 1-14, which is translated from Boccaccio's Filostrato 3. 585-600 :

O luce eterna, il cui lieto splendore
Fa bello il terzo ciel, dal qual ne piove
Piacer, vaghezza, pietade ed amore ;
Del sole amica, e figliuola di Giove,
Benigna donna d' ogni gentil core,
Certa cagion del valor che mi muove
A' sospir dolci della mia salute,
Sempre lodata sia la tua virtute.

Il ciel, la terra, lo mare e l' inferno
Ciascuno in sè la tua potenza sente,
O chiara luce ; e s' io il ver discerno,
Le piante, i semi, e l' erbe puramente,
Gli uccel, le fiere, i pesci con eterno
Vapor ti senton nel tempo piacente,
E gli uomini e gli dei, nè creatura
Senza di te nel mondo vale o dura.

CHAUCER, INVOCATION TO THE TRINITY

Troilus and Criseyde 5. 1863-1869. The first three lines are from Dante, Paradiso 14. 28-30:

Quell' uno e due e tre che sempre vive,
E regna sempre in tre e due ed uno,
Non circonscritto, e tutto circonscrive.

Thou oon, and two, and three, eterne onlyve,¹
That regnest ay in three and two and oon,
Uncircumscript, and al mayst circumscriue,
Us from visible and invisible foon

So make us, Jesus, for thy grace digne,²
For love of mayde and moder thyn benigne!

PLAYS

THE CLERIC AND THE MAIDEN

This fragmentary interlude, belonging to the thirteenth century, is the first English comedy, and the only one extant from the Middle Ages. It was printed by Wright from a manuscript then in private hands, but now MS. Brit. Mus. Add. 23,986, written about 1300 by a French scribe. A more critical edition is by Heuser (Anglia 30. 306-19). According to the latter, the dialect indicates south Yorkshire or north Lincolnshire; as there is mention in Dame Sirith (see above, p. 145) of Boston, in Lincolnshire, the two works belong to the same region, though the manuscript of Dame Sirith hails from Worcester. Heuser assumes that both works rest upon a lost interlude. He concludes:

1. Dame Sirith was originally written in rhyming couplets.
2. Dame Sirith has only 47 narrative lines (24 of these at the beginning) out of 450, and these occur almost exclusively when a new character enters; everything indicates that it was an interlude before it was a fabliau.
3. Dame Sirith and our interlude are akin in subject, dramatic character, verse, dialect, and occasionally in phraseology; hence both repose upon a thirteenth-century interlude.
4. Various changes of the original appear in Dame Sirith (narrative additions, verse, dialect), so that our interlude does not spring from the fabliau. In the interlude the deceived woman is a girl, not, as in every other version, a wife; hence the fabliau does not spring from the present interlude. It is likely that each author worked, not from a manuscript, but from his own recollection of the acted interlude.
5. The names throw no light upon a possible French origin. For (a) as the scribe was French (Heuser, p. 310), the saints, Michel and Dinis, signify nothing; (b) Mome Elwis and Malkyn are English names; the Margeri of Dame Sirith is French, but must have been used in England; the Willekin of Dame Sirith is English; Sirith is Scandinavian (= Sigrith); the Nelde of Dame Sirith is hardly a proper name, but possibly from OE. eald, old. Elwis, or Helwys, points to the eastern part of England, where there occur such family-names as Helwys and Elwes.

With respect to Heuser's (5), the indications are that behind the Clericus et Puella there was a French original. Malkyn has a termination borrowed from Dutch or Low German, but the first syllable is from the French Matilda (note that the wife of Henry I changed her original name of Eadgyth, Edith, to Matilda). Mone (MS. Mome) is borrowed from Scandinavian or Dutch. The other names point clearly to France: to the saints, Michael and Denis, add Leonard (cf. above, p. 387), who is associated with the vicinity of Limoges; and Elwis is surely the French Heluis (Helois, Heluiz, Helui, Heloi, Eluys), which is frequently found in the French feudal epic before 1180 — thirteen times in Garin le Lorrain, for instance (Langlois, Table des Noms Propres dans les Chansons de Geste, pp. 329–30); compare Chaucer's 'Helowys' in Wife of Bath's Prologue 677, referring to the mistress of Abelard. Then fayllard, 477 8 (following its noun), is French, like the boinard of Dame Sirith (152 19). As to Dame Sirith, the name Margeri is French, as we have seen; Willekin has the same ending as Malkyn; and Nelde (rather, nelde) represents a variant spelling of 'needle' (the one crone may have ostensibly supported herself with her needle, as the other with her distaff).

Compare the Debate of the Cleric and the Maiden, pp. 418–20, above.

The interlude begins: Hic incipit Interludium de Clerico et Puella, and these names are retained throughout the stage-directions; I have substituted Cler. and Maid. I have also supplied the headings for the scenes, and made several emendations.

The manuscript commonly represents initial þ (and occasionally ȝ) by y; I have restored the original forms. It also confounds w and v, supplies and omits h at random, etc.

THE CHESTER NOAH'S FLOOD

Even as early as the fourth century, Greek Christian preachers introduced dramatic dialogue into their sermons, no doubt under the influence of the dramatic tradition which had been perpetuated from the classic age; and they were imitated by certain of the Latin Fathers. Such dialogue is found, again, in the Christ of the Old English poet, Cynewulf. Thus, before the ritual of the Church developed into the beginnings of the miracle-play, the dramatic element in Scriptural narrative had been accentuated in both the East and the West (Cook, 'A Remote Analogue to the Miracle Play,' in Jour. Eng. and Germ. Phil. 4 (1903). 421-51; cf. 5. 62-4).

In the tenth century, the Concordia Regularis of St. Æthelwold (A.D. 965-975), in the ceremony for the third nocturn at matins on Easter morning, directs three brethren to represent the women who go to the sepulchre, and one the angel seated at the door of the tomb. As they approach, the angel says: Quem quæritis in sepulchro, O Christicolæ? To which the three reply: Jesum Nazarenum crucifixum. And he answers: Non est hic; surrexit, sicut prædixerat. Ite, nuntiate quia surrexit a mortuis, etc. (Chambers, Mediæval Stage 2. 308; cf. Gayley, Plays of Our Forefathers, pp. 17-8).

The rise and progress of the miracle-play are well sketched by Jusserand (Lit. Hist. Eng. People 1. 456 ff.):

'The imitation of any action is a step towards drama. Conventional, liturgical, ritualistic as the imitation was, still there was an imitation in the ceremony of mass; and mass led to the religious drama, which was therefore, at starting, as conventional, liturgical, and ritualistic as could be. Its early beginning is to be sought for in the antiphoned parts of the service, and then it makes one with the service itself. . . . A great step was made when, at the principal feasts of the year, Easter and Christmas, the chanters, instead of giving their responses from their stalls, moved in the Church to recall the action commemorated on that day; additions were introduced into the received text of the service; religious drama begins then to have an existence of its own. "Tell us, shepherds, whom do you seek in this stable?"—They will answer: "Christ the Saviour, our Lord." Such is the starting-point; it dates from the tenth century; from this is derived the play of Shepherds, of which many versions have come down to us. . . .

'Verse replaced prose; the vulgar idiom replaced Latin; open air and the public square replaced the church nave and its subdued light. It was no longer necessary to have recourse to priests wearing a dalmatic in order to represent midwives; the feminine parts were performed by young boys dressed as women. . . .

'The religious drama was on the way to lose its purely liturgical character when the conquest of England had taken place. Under the reign of the Norman and Angevin kings, the taste for dramatic performances increased considerably; within the first century after Hastings we find them numerous and largely attended. The oldest representation the memory of which has come down to us took place at the beginning of the twelfth century. . . . A little later in the same century, Fitzstephen, who wrote under Henry II, mentions as a common occurrence the "representations of miracles" held in London. In the following century, under Henry III, some were written in the English language. During the fourteenth century, in the time of Chaucer, mysteries were at the height of their popularity. . . .

'In a more or less complete state, the collections of the Mysteries performed at Chester, Coventry, Woodkirk, and York have been preserved, without speaking of fragments of other series. Most of those texts belong to the fourteenth century, but have been retouched at a later date. Old Mysteries did not escape the hand of the improvers, any more than old churches, where any one who pleased added paintings, porches, and tracery, according to the fashion of the day. . . .

'Once emerged from the Church, the drama had the whole town in which to display itself; and it filled the whole town. On these days the city belonged to dramatic art; each company had its cars or scaffolds, pageants (placed on wheels in some towns), each car being meant to represent one of the places where the events in the play happened. The complete series of scenes was exhibited at the main crossings, or on the principal squares or open spaces in the town. . . .

'While in the theatre of Bacchus the tragedies of Sophocles were played once and no more, the Christian drama, remodeled from century to century, was represented for four hundred years before immense multitudes; and this is a unique phenomenon in the history of literature.'

According to Gayley (op. cit., pp. 132-3; cf. pp. 128-31) the Chester cycle, at least in part, was in existence in the first third of the fourteenth century, and its present form probably represents a revision made not far from 1400 (see also Ten Brink, English Literature 2.1274; Hemingway, English Nativity Plays, pp. xix-xxi; Pollard, English Miracle Plays, p. xxxvi; Cook, in Nation of May 27, 1915, p. 599). The manuscripts, five in number, are, however, much later (1591-1604).

Pollard thus characterizes these plays (p. xxxvii): 'There is less in the Chester plays to jar on modern feelings than in any other of the cycles. The humor is kept more within bounds, the religious tone is far higher.' Of the Noah's Flood, Gayley says (p. 151): 'The characters are distinct and consistently developed. The comic episodes are natural and justifiable, for they serve to display, not to distort, character, and they grow out of the dramatic action. They are, moreover, varied, and, to some extent, cumulative.' Chaucer thus alludes to the stubbornness of Noah's wife (Miller's Tale 352-7):

'Hastow nat herd,' quod Nicholas, 'also
The sorwe of Noe with his felawshipe,
Er that he mighte gete his wyf to shipe?
Him had be lever, I dar wel undertake,
At thilke tyme, than alle hise wetheres blake,
That she hadde had a ship herself allone.

Our text is based upon MS. Harl. 2124 (H.), as printed by Deimling (E.E.T.S. Ex. Ser. 62. 48-63), with certain stage-directions and variants from MS. Bodley 175 (B.), as contained in Deimling's edition, and from MS. Brit. Mus. Add. 10,305 (W.), as printed by Thomas Wright in 1843. For the Latin names of the characters, Noë, etc., I have substituted the corresponding English ones.

There is a duplication of the dumb show of making the ark, of the command to take the beasts by sevens, and of the comic episode of Noah's wife; this looks as though two drafts had been rather clumsily patched together.

There are emendations by Kölbing in Engl. Stud. 16. 280; 21. 163.

THE BROME PLAY OF ABRAHAM AND ISAAC

Lucy Toulmin Smith, the first editor (in 1884) thus characterizes the play, in comparison with the five others on the same subject (Anglia 7. 332): 'On the whole, the Brome version now printed is superior to those above described in the touches of child-nature, and in the play of feeling skilfully shown — the dear coquetting between the love of his child and the committal of the deed by the obedient but agonized father. The child begging his father not to kill him, and his fear of the sword even after all danger is over, . . . are touched in with a life not found elsewhere. The thought of the mother . . . breaks out in the most natural and affecting manner, . . . and the joyful rebound of emotion after the painful strain between duty and affection, expressing itself in the kisses of Abraham and the apostrophes of Isaac to the "gentle sheep,"

¹ MS. is⁴ MS. this⁶ W. adds:² Gen. 9. 12-15⁵ Gen. 9. 16*Finis. Deo gracias! per me, George Bellin, 1592.
Come, Lorde Jesu, come quickhly.*³ MS. was (em. K.)

must have warmly appealed to the hearts of the audience. Finally, the lesson of faith for "learned and lewed" and "the wisest of us all" is taught by the "Doctor" in the simplest manner.'

Gayley thinks this the third miracle-play in order of time, the first being The Harrowing of Hell (ca. 1250), and the second, Jacob and Esau (ca. 1280). He says (Plays of our Forefathers, p. 126): 'The Brome play of Abraham and Isaac, which comes next in order of production, is undoubtedly the basis of The Sacrifice of Isaac in the Chester cycle, and probably in an earlier version dates from the beginning of the fourteenth century.' A particularly close parallel is that between 506 3-6 and the Chester play 289-92 (ed. Deimling, p. 76):

If I have trespassed in any degree,
With a yard you maye beate me;
Put up your sword, if your will be,
For I am but a childe.

The play has been three times printed — by Miss Smith as above (A.), by Lady Kerrison and Miss Smith in 1886 (B.), and by Manly in 1897 (M.); Pollard has reproduced lines 316-435 (English Miracle Plays, Appendix IV), following Miss Smith.

The unique manuscript (1470-1480) takes its name from the village of Brome, in Suffolk, two miles north of Eye. Brome was from the fourteenth century the seat of the Cornwallis family, to which belonged the Lord Cornwallis who was conspicuous in the American Revolution.

The two editions directly from the manuscript differ here and there in their readings; of the readings I have rejected I have taken no account. Important emendations have been made by Miss Smith, Holthausen (Anglia 13 (1891). 361-2), and Manly (Spec. Pre-Shak. Drama 1. 41-57). I have been tempted to further efforts at restoration by the remark of Miss Smith (Anglia 7. 322-3): 'Judging by the analogy of other plays of the kind, it is probable that this also was originally composed with much care for its poetical form, but has become partially corrupt through oral repetition and the errors of copyists.' All the emendations not attributed to S., H., or M. are by myself; some are perhaps rather daring, but it is easy to revert to the manuscript-readings. Stage-directions (following a bracket) have been supplied partly from S. and M.; two or three are found in the manuscript, in Latin.

Miss Smith remarks (Anglia 7. 322): 'With regard to the versification, the reader will observe that it is irregular: in several places the lines run in clear stanzas of five lines, riming abaab; in others it appears to be in stanzas of eight lines, riming alternately, with a frequent short line or tag following. There are also many lines which seem to be formless as regards metre, rime, or stanza.' Accordingly the indications of stanzaic form are often somewhat obscured in this play.

I have modernized in the stage-directions the names of certain characters, for the sake of consistency — Deus to God, The Angell to Angel, Ysaac to Isaac.

8. Abacuc: the allusion is to the apocryphal Pseudo-Matthew, chap. 14, which reads: 'Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Habakkuk the prophet, who said, Between two animals thou art made known.' The reference here is to Hab. 3. 2, where the Septuagint version reads: 'Thou shalt be known between the two living creatures.'

THE SECOND TOWNELEY SHEPHERDS' PLAY (SECUNDA PASTORUM)

Gayley thus characterizes this piece (Plays of our Forefathers, p. 182): 'The Wakefield Secunda . . . is plot within plot, developed through eight closely consecutive scenes, and crowded with action. The comic adventure is indeed but an episode — this "sheep stealing of Mak" — but it has its beginning, middle, and end; the motive, the devices, and the progress of a comedietta in itself. It grows out of and belongs to the conditions with which the enveloping action opens, and its party of the second part are also dramatic persons in the main action. . . . As a work of dramatic genius this little play, with its home-made philosophy, home-made figures, and home-made humor, with its comic business, its sometimes boisterous spirits, its quiet and shrewd irony, its ludicrous diction, its revelation of rural manners, its simple and healthful creed, its radiant and naïve devoutness, its dramatic anticipations, postponements, and surprises, stands out English and alone, and a masterpiece.' The three shepherds he thus describes (pp. 182-3): 'Coll, the first shepherd, who soliloquizes concerning political philosophy, a kind of later fourteenth-century populist whom it refreshes to grumble; . . . Gyb, the second shepherd, whose vein is of matrimonial philosophy; . . . and Daw, the hind, whose philosophy is eclectic, who swears by the unborn Christ and Saint Nicholas, and "lets the world pass." He it is who sees "sudden sights in the darkness"; who warns of the midnight-stalking Mak; who makes that "Yoman" of the king lie safely down between them; it is he, too, who dreams of the stolen sheep, and conducts the vain search therefor; and who, fortunately flinging back to Mak's home to give the hypothetical babe, "that little day starne," a "saxpence," lifts up the clout and diagnoses the fraud that has been practised upon them.' According to Pollard (English Miracle Plays, p. 189), Mak is probably adapted from the favorite comic character, the conjurer and buffoon Maugis, of the romance of the Four Sons of Aymon. Pollard's general estimate is (England's edition, p. xxx): 'The Secunda Pastorum . . . is really perfect as a work of art.'

The play is written, like four others in the Towneley series — Noah, Prima Pastorum, Herod, and the Buffeting — and parts of others (cf. Pollard's remarks in England's edition, pp. xxi ff.; Gayley, op. cit., pp. 163 ff.) in a nine-line stanza, rhyming $aaaa^4b^1ccc^2b^1$, where the superior numbers denote the number of feet in the line (the a-lines have each four feet, for instance). In reality, however, there are four rhymes to the stanza, instead of three, since each of the a-lines has a rhyme in the middle; the scheme may therefore be represented thus (cf. Pollard, p. xxii): $abababab^2c^1ddd^2c^1$. All the stanzas save one (535 14 ff.) are constructed on this model, and that has lost two of the four opening lines.

Not to mention earlier editions, the play was printed in 1897 by England (The Towneley Plays, E.E.T.S. Ex. Ser., No. 71, pp. 116-40), and by Manly (Spec. Pre-Shak. Drama 1. 94–119, with a few emendations by Kittredge); in 1909 by Hemingway (English Nativity Plays, pp. 188–214); and in part by Pollard (English Miracle Plays, pp. 31–43). Emendations by Kölbing are in Engl. Stud. 21. 165–6. Modernizations are to be found in Everyman's Library (Everyman, with Other Interludes, ed. by Ernst Rhys) and (better) in the Riverside Literature Series (The Second Shepherds' Play, etc., ed. by C. G. Child); the latter has a good bibliographical introduction, pp. 27–8.

The manuscript may be dated about 1460, and the composition of the plays may extend approximately from 1360–1410 (Pollard, in England's edition, pp. xxvii–xxviii). Miss Hope Traver (Mod. Lang. Notes 20 (1905). 5) concludes from the use of the word 'crochett' (551 7), introduced into the language before 1400, that the Secunda Pastorum was written 'perhaps about 1400 or a little later' (for other references to music see 532 16 ff.; 542 25 ff.; 544 9; 554 24).

The stage-directions are modern. For Primus Pastor, Uxor, etc., I have substituted the proper names in the text; thus: Coll for Primus Pastor; Gib for Secundus (iius) Pastor; Daw for Tertius (iiiis) Pastor; Gill for Uxor (eias), etc.

Coll. Hayll, comly and clene! Hayll, yong Child! 5
 Hayll, Maker, as I meyne, of⁵ a madyn so mylde!
 Thou has waryd,⁶ I weyne, the warlo so wylde;
 The fals gyler⁷ of teyn,⁸ now goys he begylde. —
 Lo, he merys,⁹
 Lo, he laghys, my Swetyng! — 10
 A wel fare¹⁰ metyng;
 I have holden my hetyng.¹¹ —
 Have a bob¹² of cherys.

Gib. Hayll, sufferan¹³ Savyoure! Ffor thou has us soght, Hayll, frely Foyde¹⁴ and Floure, that all thyng has wroght! 15
 Hayll, full of favoure, that made all of noght!
 Hayll! I kneyll and I cowre. A byrd have I broght
 To my Barne.
 Hayll, lytyll tyne¹⁵ Mop¹⁶!
 Of oure crede thou art Crop.¹⁷ 20
 I wold drynk on thy cop,¹⁸
 Lytyll Daystarne.¹⁹

Daw. Hayll, Derlyng dere, full of godhede!
 I pray the be nere when that I have nede.
